SAVAGE FIGHTING IN ALGERIA

DRUNKEN JEW'S ESCAPADE

MUSSULMAN REPRISALS

(Special to "Telegraph")

(By Telegraph. Copyright. Telegraphic Messages Ordinance, 1934. Received August 7, 9.03 a.m.)

Algiers, Aug. 6.

Savage fighting arising from religious antagonisms occurred to-day in the city of Constantine.

Twenty were killed and seventy were severely wounded.

The origin of the disturbances appears to have been the visit of a drunken Jewish Zouave to one of the Constantine mosques during prayer.

He began insulting the Mussulmans and their religion, and the latter then invaded the Jewish quarter, attacking the Jews.

Fighting raged through the quarter all last night.

PEACE AND WAR.

To-day, the delegates of the two parties met at the Town Hall and arrived at a peaceful settlement, but no sooner had they separated than fighting started again on a big scale.

A strong force of Mussulmans marched down the main street in the Jewish quarter and set fire to houses.

Knives, revolvers and bludgeons were freely used in the ensuing battle.

Calm has since been restored.—Reuter Special.

COSTES CRASH RUMOURS

DISPELLED BY SAFE LANDING IN BRINDISI

Paris, Aug. 6.

Captain Costes arrived safely at Brindisi and left immediately for Athens after re-fuelling. He did not meet with any accident.

An earlier unconfirmed Rome report suggested that the famous French flier had crashed in the Alps on his way to Italy and had been seriously injured.—Reuter.

FAMILY OF ELEVEN TAKE POISON

FAMINE TRAGEDY IN CHEKIANG

Hangchow, Aug. 7.

Wretched conditions prevailing in Chekiang Province as a result of the persistence of the drought. Crop failures have occurred everywhere and famine has already been created in districts which are less accessible to relief agencies.

Many people have committed suicide rather than face slow starvation. In one instance, in the Pohsien District, a whole family of eleven took poison. A twelve-year old child, who did not take a fatal dose, was the sole survivor.—Central News.

With regard to the letter from "Protestant Christian" which appeared in our issue of yesterday, it should be stated that there was no "blessing" of the graves on the occasion of the pilgrimage to the Morrison tombs in Macao cemetery on Wednesday last.

Four monuments similar to that above are, it is reported, to be erected at Changchun, Taitsihar, Harbin and Chengteh, in commemoration of the "martyrs" who fought for the establishment of the Empire of Manchukuo.

BATHER'S CAR RAIDED

CASTLE PEAK ROAD INCIDENT

Whilst Mr. Donald A. Corlett, assistant general manager of the States Steamship Co. in Hongkong, was bathing from the 14-mile beach on the Castle Peak Road yesterday afternoon, he was victimised by a thief who went to his motor-car, which was parked near by, and stole a wrist watch and $50 in money.

At about five o'clock, Mr. Paul Braga was passing the spot in his car, when, in response to a signal by Mr. Corlett, he stopped. Mr. Corlett informed him that he had come out to the beach with a lady friend who had with her some valuables, including rings, money, etc., as well as a passport and a steamer passage ticket. During their absence on the beach, Mr. Corlett stated, a thief evidently gained access to the car, having presumably secured possession of the key from Mr. Corlett's jacket pocket, stole various articles, and then locked the car again. It was at first feared that the whole of the lady's valuable had been stolen.

MAN ARRESTED.

Mr. Braga then motored to Tsun Wan Police Station, where he gave information of the theft, and later a European police officer and three Chinese detectives appeared on the scene.

As the result of police enquiries, a man was later arrested.

Seen this morning by a Telegraph representative, Mr. Corlett stated that the loss was not so heavy as was at first feared, being confined to a wrist watch and $50 in money.

SMASH ON KIAOCHOW RAILWAY

Locomotives Completely Wrecked

Tsingtao, Aug. 6.

A Tsingtao-bound passenger train on the Tsinan-Tsingtao Railway crashed into a standing freight train at the Ta-Erh-Pao Station late last night, the impact completely wrecking the two locomotives.

Fortunately, only a few casualties occurred although the damage is estimated at over $150,000.

The accident is attributed to the negligence of pointsmen.—Central News.

A warning issued by the Manila Observatory at 3.25 p.m. yesterday stated that a typhoon is situated south-east of Naha, moving N.W. or N.N.W.

IMPRESSIVE LAST RITES FOR PRES. HINDENBURG

CORTEGE JOURNEYS THROUGH NIGHT

TORCHLIT SCENE AT NEUDECK

BRIEF HALT AT FROEDENAU

Berlin, Aug. 6.

Most impressive scenes were witnessed as the remains of President von Hindenburg were borne from Neudeck to Tannenberg, where the interment is taking place.

In the glare of torches held aloft, the coffin was carried out of Neudeck Castle by four officers of the East Prussian Regiment, and behind the coffin, statue-like, was Hindenburg's son and wife, together with the late Field Marshal's two daughters and their husbands.

The coffin was then placed on a catafalque, and a mixed choir from the village church rendered "Power of Love." The Vicar then spoke a few words.

TORCH PROCESSION.

This brief service concluded, the coffin was placed on a gun-carriage and the funeral cortege was formed, all the troops present following in slow march through the lines, bearing torches as far as Deutscheylau, where the coffin was transferred to a motor hearse.

Accompanied by a motor detachment of troops and police, the cortege continued for fifty miles to Tannenberg, where it is arriving at four o'clock in the morning.

The cortege halted briefly at Froedenau, where, during the Great War, Hindenburg and his staff directed the Battle of Tannenberg. —Reuter.

HONGKONG SERVICE.

A special memorial service to the late President von Hindenburg was held at the Union Church, Hongkong, this morning, being attended by practically every member of the German community, members of the Consular Body, His Excellency the Governor and Lady Peel and their son, H. E. Major General and Mrs. Borrett, Commodore and Mrs. Elliott, and many others.

The service, which was most impressive, was conducted by the Rev. F. Diehl, of the Rhenish Mission, who, speaking in German, delivered a striking tribute to the late President. The Rev. E. G. Powell later read an English translation of the address.

A fuller report will appear in our final edition.

ASUNCION CHARGES OF BREACH OF NEUTRALITY

(By Telegraph. Copyright. Telegraphic Messages Ordinance, 1934. Received August 7, 9.43 a.m.)

Washington, Aug. 6.

It is learned that Chile is breaking off diplomatic relations with Paraguay, one of the participants in the Gran Chaco War.

The dispute arises out of the campaign in the Gran Chaco.

It appears that certain Paraguayan newspapers published reports alleging that the Chilean Government had been guilty of violating the international law of neutrality.

Demands were sent to Asuncion for an explanation of the statements in the Paraguayan newspapers, but no satisfactory explanation was forthcoming and it is authoritatively learned in diplomatic circles in Washington that Chile intends to withdraw her Minister from Asuncion.—United Press.

Secret Gun Trials

DEADLY AGAINST AIRCRAFT

(Special to "Telegraph")

(By Telegraph. Copyright. Telegraphic Messages Ordinance, 1934. Received August 7, 9.43 a.m.)

Washington, Aug. 6.

It is learned that the United States Army is engaged in secret experiments with a new type anti-aircraft stratosphere gun.

Ballistic experts hope to attain a vertical range of ten miles.

The gun is equipped with special electrical altitude finders, range finders and speed and direction indicators, virtually assuring ability to bring down enemy aircraft.

RING OF STEEL.

The weapon will be part of a general anti-aircraft defence plan that the War Department is working out in connection with an attempt to put a ring of steel round the country.

Mr. George H. Dern, Secretary of the War Department, is making an effort to obtain an allotment of $33,000,000 from the Public Works Administration in order that the plan may be started as early as possible.—United Press.

WOUNDING RUMOUR

ALLEGED TROUBLE AT SHANHAIKWAN

BRITISH SOLDIER HIT BY BULLET?

Usually well-informed Chinese circles to-day repeat the allegation of a shooting incident during military manoeuvres near Shanhaikwan, insisting that a British soldier was wounded by a Japanese bullet.

The report says that the incident occurred during simultaneous Japanese and British manoeuvres and adds that it is now the subject of diplomatic negotiations.

The British Legation at Peking is alleged to have received instructions from the British Foreign Office to see that the affair is not aggravated.

A whole series of rumours of untoward events—alleged to be an outcome of Japanese objections to the holding of manoeuvres in the Shanhaikwan area by British forces, although this has been a regular procedure,—have been published recently.

On Saturday, for instance, the British Legation denied that a clash between British and Japanese blue jackets had occurred at Chinwangtao.

Harbin, Aug. 7.

Considerable inconvenience has arisen from the complete suspension of traffic on the Chinese Eastern Railway from Harbin eastward, following a series of train wreckings and attacks by bandits, culminating in the overturning of a train on Saturday morning near Imienpo. How many persons were killed or wounded in the attack is still unknown.—Central News.

MYSTERY MAN IN VIENNA PUTSCH

HUNT FOR "HERR KUNZE"

ALLEGED TO BE NOTED LAWYER

LEFT REBELS TO THEIR FATE

Vienna, Aug. 6.

Revelations concerning another mystery figure in the background of the attempted Nazi coup d'etat have been made following acceptance of the conclusion that he has made good his escape.

Ever since the raid on the Chancellery which led to the death of Dr. Dollfuss, the police have been assiduously seeking a man who went under the name of "Herr Kunze," who is believed to have been the master-mind behind the entire movement.

It is now alleged that the well-known Nazi lawyer, Dr. Waechter, who defended Rudolf Bertil, the man who attempted unsuccessfully to shoot Dr. Dollfuss last year is the man concealed by the name "Kunze."

'PHONE CALL.

It is stated that during the early stages of the putsch and while the rebels were still in occupation of the Chancellery, one of the leaders tried to telephone to "Herr Kunze" at a nearby cafe in order to consult him about the situation. "Kunze" had, however, already fled.

It is alleged that Dr. Waechter has disappeared from Austria and has reached Germany.—Reuter.

THE ROOSEVELT PROGRAMME

WHAT WASHINGTON EXPECTS

Washington, Aug. 6.

Observers here predict that the President's programme scheduled for the next Congress will not be conservative and involves the centralisation of the nation's banking and credit system, also a drastic revision of the tax system and comprehensive social legislation.

It is expected that any further sharp decline in business is likely to be revived by Government spending. Many expert observers believe that a business boom is likely to develop, especially if the N.R.A. is abandoned.

It is felt that the European gold bloc cannot hold out much longer. Food costs there will be high, with consequent pressure on exchanges. The flight of money to the United States would be pronounced but for exchange restrictions. Only intervention by the Stabilisation Fund can prevent the dollar from hardening. A further change in the gold content of the U.S. dollar is unlikely in the near future. If any new inflation gesture is required it will probably take the form of heavier silver buying abroad.

The Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace, states that the two million bale cotton pool will be so liquidated as not to disturb either the "spot" or "future" markets.—Swan, Culbertson and Fritz.

IF CHILD IS CROSS WON'T EAT

Take Doctor's Advice
Results Will Surprise You

If your precious child won't eat without coaxing, is nervous and underweight . . . do what doctors the world over advise: Give him a little Castoria and you will see a marked improvement the first day.

Authorities have found intestinal absorption of poisons to be the cause of most child ailments. Even when the child's habits may seem regular, poisons seep through the system and do damage. The stomach is upset. Foods do not digest properly. The nerves lose their delicate balance.

Nothing can correct this insidious condition quite as easily and naturally as Castoria. It tastes so good children beg for it. And it swiftly purges the little system of poisons. It settles the stomach, improves digestion and restores nerve-poise. Then Nature does the rest as only Nature can. Appetite for food quickly returns. Health is restored to normal. And as a result the child gains weight fast and becomes sturdy and strong.

Now take care of your child this safe, drugless way. Get a bottle of Castoria and try it. Results will delight you.

THE WORLD OF WOMEN

LIGHT AS A SUMMER BREEZE, THESE FROCKS . . . . . Subtly Designed Featherweight Crepes Fashion Smartest Evening Gowns

A printed crepe evening gown (left) has a yoke of black organza trimmed with rows of ruffles. Form fitting and cool-looking, the frock ends in a short train. Another flattering formal dress (right) has flowers and leaves in subtle colours printed crepe background.

By Marian Young

New York.

Featherweight crepes in summery printed designs fashion some of the smartest evening gowns that chic women are wearing on hot nights. Of course organza, mousseline, lace, net and novelty cottons are much in evidence and very handsome they are too.

Women who have a penchant for crepe but feel that filmsy, rather ethereal fabrics must have a place in a summer wardrobe can, so to speak, eat their cake and have it, because many printed crepe gowns are trimmed with wisps of tulle, mousseline and net. And they're charming.

For instance, the youthful printed evening gown, sketched here at the left, has a yoke of black organza, edged with rows and rows of ruffles. The gown itself is extremely form-fitting and ends in a short train. The print—blue and yellow flowers on a black background—is as cool-looking a frock as one could own.

* * *

Subtle designs are prevalent throughout the collections of midsummer prints. And motifs in medium sizes have practically replaced the small all-over and the very large floral patterns of last season. One particularly flattering evening gown (right) has a yellow background with medium-sized floral and autumn leaf designs in soft shades.

The neckline of the dress is quite low (incidentally necklines are getting lower while trains seem to be getting shorter) and there are circular godets in the skirt to give that billow, frothy effect that every one loves. It is quite plain, depending on lines to give it individuality.

GLORIFYING YOURSELF.

Mental Attitude Bears Directly on Beauty

By Alicia Hart.

Your face, generally speaking, is a telltale. It shows what you're really like inside, what you think of others and how you feel about this world in which you live.

If you are a tolerant, sympathetic person with a generous nature, your eyes will be kindly and the corners of your mouth will turn up instead of down. If, on the contrary, you often think meanly, vindictively and enviously of others and feel that life is hopeless, your eyes will have a hard, bright look about them and there will be unlovely lines around your mouth and across your forehead. The way to have beautiful thoughts and to live a wholesome, interesting life.

Get into the habit of being happy and of thinking nice things about others. Learn to enjoy your job and see how much easier it is to accomplish the routine tasks that you have to do. Every time that you catch yourself judging someone else too harshly, try to put yourself in his or her place and it's more than likely that you will find yourself thinking up excuses for the person. Try to overlook the defects in others and to see their good points instead. Remember that none of us is perfect. By judging other people as you'd have them judge you, you're sure to be happier, and therefore more beautiful.

SILVER-PLATING THE AMERICAN TREASURY

States, but again entirely at his discretion. Similarly, discretional authority is given the President to regulate or prohibit domestic sales, as well as export and import, of silver, and to sell, at home or abroad, Treasury stocks whenever they exceed the prescribed proportion to gold or whenever the market price of silver rises above $1.29 an ounce.

The act further provides that the price paid by the Treasury should at no time exceed $1.29 an ounce, and that stocks of silver situated in the United States on May 1 should not be purchased at a higher price than 50 cents an ounce. Moreover, a tax of 50 per cent is imposed on all profits accruing from silver transactions effected after May 16, 1934.

The Secretary of the Treasury is still directed to issue currency certificates against the silver acquired under the act. However, the face value of these issues does not have to be the equivalent of $1.29 for each ounce. The act merely prescribes that it should not be less than the cost of the metal purchased. This is another restriction upon the amount of inflation that the purchases of silver are likely to cause.

While much less comprehensive than the Dies-Thomas bill, the new measure nevertheless represents a substantial gain for the silverites in their march toward their one and only real objective—an artificial rise in the price of silver. The Dies-Thomas bill was framed in such a way as to make it almost certain that the price of silver would, sooner or later, be driven up to $1.29 an ounce, or about 200 per cent above the current market price. The silver purchase act may or may not achieve this precise result, but it is confidently expected to carry the price of silver substantially above the present level. To the extent that it does this, it will afford the silver producers a return in excess of what the market for that metal would normally yield them.

The advocates of silver have always clothed their special-interest plea in a cloak of general welfare. Their principal arguments deserve a brief examination.

The acceptance of silver by the United States Government in exchange for agricultural exports has been urged on the ground that it would help the farmer by opening up new foreign markets for his products; especially in the Orient. But the proponents of this argument have never explained that by receiving silver at a premium, the United States Government would have embarked upon undisguised "dumping," one of the most unsavoury practices of unfair competition in international trade, which could not have failed to arouse bitter resentment and bring about sharp retaliation in other countries, thus curtailing, rather than promoting, international trade.

Purchases of silver by the Treasury have been further advocated for the purpose of increasing our monetary metallic base. It is difficult to imagine that anyone with a glimmer of understanding of our monetary organization can seriously believe that this country suffers from a shortage of basic monetary metal. Thanks to the devaluation of the dollar and the recent inflow of gold, we possess to-day a stock of gold representing almost twice as many dollars as in the balmy days of top-notch prosperity. Without adding one ounce of silver to our stocks of monetary metal, we now have a currency and credit foundation for a boom so frenzied that even the mad days of 1928-29 would appear mere child's play by comparison.

The most spurious, as well as the most naive, argument advanced in connection with silver purchases has been that, by means of such purchases and the consequent advancement of the price of the metal, the general domestic price index can be raised to the 1926 level and then maintained at that level by alternate turning on and off of the silver purchase tap. Those who still continue to urge this argument have clearly learned less than nothing from the dismal failure of the recent experiment in raising commodity prices by a manipulation of the price of gold. The whole idea is so fantastic that it ought to tax even the most undiscriminating credulity. Unfortunately, it is still reflected in the new bill, though greatly toned down and much reduced in scope.

* * *

The Dies-Thomas bill would have been a major disaster for the process of recovery. Its effect would have been to milk the country for the advantage of the silver producers and, at the same time, to give us an unworkable—and, consequently, economically destructive—monetary organization. The silver act is, by comparison, much less dangerous in this respect. Nevertheless, it still represents a triumph of special interests over general welfare, since it opens the way for an undue enrichment of a small group at public expense, although on a much lesser scale than that group would have wished.

This second aspect of the question is fundamentally far more important than the first. A subsidy to the silver producers is bad enough, but it is much less serious than a further unsettlement of business confidence resulting from a policy of continued monetary manipulation. So long as this policy is maintained, the chances for an international agreement on monetary stabilization—an indispensable condition of real economic recovery—remain as slight as ever. What happened at the London conference last summer showed clearly that there is not a single nation in the world prepared to follow our lead in embarking upon a permanent system of price control by currency management.

LABOUR AND WAR

At a moment when fears of another European conflagration are openly voiced, it is of interest to turn to the attitude of British Labour on the question of war. This has recently been clarified at a joint meeting of the T.U.C. General Council, the National Executive of the Labour Party, and the Executive Committee of the Parliamentary Labour Party. The fundamental idea for which British Labour stands is that peace must be conceived as a positive constructive enterprise in the building up of a co-operative world commonwealth, and it contends that the old negative, backward-looking competitive idea of maintaining balance of power as the final goal of the nation's foreign policy must be adjured once and for all. Coming down to realities, there is a distinction drawn between wars of an aggressive character and wars undertaken in defence of the collective peace system. It is recognised that the British Government might have to use its military and naval forces in support of the League, in restraining an aggressor nation which declined to submit to the League's authority, and which flagrantly used military measures in defiance of its pledged word. But the ultimate objective is the ridding of the world of all national armed forces, substituting therefor an international police force under the League's authority. The first step in this direction, the Labour Party suggests, should be the abolition of national Air Forces and the establishment of an international force of interceptor and scout planes under the League's orders, and the internationalisation of civil aviation. With regard to legislation, the Party has in mind a Peace Act which would place upon the Statute Book Britain's national interpretation of her obligations under the collective peace system, and which would bind the Government to submit disputes with other States to some form of pacific procedure. At the same time, emphasis is laid on the duty of supporting the Government unflinchingly in all the risks and consequences attendant upon its action in taking part in collective measures against a peace-breaker. On the question of a general strike in the event of war occurring, the Party has now somewhat modified its views, and is content to call a general Congress of the various labour organisations when there is threat of hostilities, for the purpose of considering the situation in all its ramifications. In the main, the Labour ideas will find fairly general acceptance by reason of the fact that they are based on a sound approach to the problem, but they would be of even greater merit were there some indication that other nations would fall in line therewith. They will, at any rate, serve as a worthy ideal, pointing to the day when the settlement of disputes by means of armed forces will have become a thing of the past.

NOTES OF THE DAY

PEACE AND SUSPICION

The maddest thing about the mad world of to-day is the combination of an almost universal desire for peace with intensive diplomatic activity—some would call it intrigue—that bears every appearance of being ultimately designed for another test of armed strength. That provides the error into which so many observers persistently fall. The strength of, say, France's interest in the preservation of peace is allowed to fill the entire picture for them; obscuring every other tendency, including the most important and dangerous, the refusal of those nations who proclaim their peaceful intentions to drop their suspicions of their neighbours. Even an almost unanimous wish for peace cannot in itself prevent war and certainly not when it is accompanied by a steady preparation for the worst.

STABILISING INFLUENCE

Search for a possible stabilising influence in Europe to-day is vain, though it does not follow that it will not appear. Economic recovery, for instance, if it could be produced as by the stroke of a magician's wand, would alter the whole complexion within a week. In the meantime, however, Europe is seen entering upon a new, decisive stage of forming alliances. That it is still too early to define the precise alignments which are emerging is admitted even by those engaged in conducting governmental policy. But trends and broad outlines of coming alliances can already be discerned. And in a world madly arming and re-arming the policy of grouping military powers into rival camps seems only too inviting. Germany, Italy, Austria and Hungary—the same Triple Alliance which persisted up to the moment of Austria's war declaration against the Serbs twenty years ago are again coming closer together. France, Russia, Czecho-Slovakia and Turkey are regarded as the nucleus of the opposing forces.

* * *

BOTH ENDS

Britain is viewed as "playing both ends from the middle" and as having reverted to her post-Napoleonic policy of striking a balance of power between France and Germany, enabling her at a given crucial moment to throw her weight in the scales on whichever side her interests may command. Without destroying this picture, it can be admitted that Austro-German relations at this time continue to be, to say the least, unfriendly and that Rome's fear of Germany's overt or covert annexation of Austria remains a wedge between Italians and Germans. The opinion prevails in Europe, however, that the centrifugal force of a rearmed Germany will draw Austria into its orbit, while Italy's anti-French bias causes Mussolini to lean towards Germany. As in 1914, however, Italy may not be reckoned as a certain ally for either side.

EMBRYONIC ALLIANCES

The tentacles of these embryonic alliance, according to one source, extend far into the Orient and it is suggested that Germany and Japan are approaching a definite understanding as to their common action in case of war on the Soviet Union. Germany would doubtless need three or more years to build up her army, air force and navy to the point at which her worth as a military ally acquires real value. The saving clause in these developments is likely to be the conclusion of a Pact of Mutual Assistance between Russia, France, Czechoslovakia and Germany (among others) if Germany decides to adhere. Here again, it would develop into a defensive alliance against Germany if Hitler declines to accept. The recent endorsement of the Eastern Locarno proposal by Sir John Simon does not remove the necessity for keeping a close watch upon the situation.

SILVER-PLATING THE AMERICAN TREASURY

By LEO PASVOLSKY

THE only good thing one can say about the new silver purchase act, introduced in Congress as an Administration bill on May 22 and signed by the President on June 19, is that it is less harmful than any of the numerous measures previously proposed by individual congressmen and senators. Apart from this, the measure has nothing whatever to recommend it. It is an economically bad and wholly unnecessary piece of legislation.

The repeated surrender of the two houses of Congress and of the President himself to a small, but clamorous and persistent, group of pro-silver congressmen and senators is one of those political mysteries that defy rational explanation. Not one of the numerous arguments in favour of "doing something for silver," advanced in and out of Congress, has ever borne even a semblance of reasonableness or soundness. These arguments have always constituted nothing more than verbal foliage around the real objective of the movement—the enrichment of silver producers and of speculators in that metal at the expense of the rest of the community. Yet the silverites have marched steadily on, from one victory to another.

Their first success was achieved in the summer of 1933, when a provision was written into the Thomas amendment, authorizing the Treasury to receive silver in payment of the war debt instalments falling due on June 15. Then came the international silver agreement in London, negotiated entirely on our initiative, in accordance with which the United States Government undertook to make purchases of silver roughly equivalent to our domestic production of that metal. This undertaking was carried into effect in December, when the President, by an executive order, directed the Treasury to purchase all domestically produced silver at 64.5 cents an ounce, or roughly at 50 per cent above the then prevailing market price.

Not satisfied with this substantial achievement, the congressional silver bloc began to press for further advantage. On March 19, the House passed the so-called Dies bill. When this measure reached the Senate, it was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, rewritten there into a formidable plan for action with respect to silver, and in its new form was favourably reported to the Senate by Senator Elmer Thomas as spokesman for the committee. It was at this juncture that the President stepped into the fray, and the Administration silver bill was hammered out by Treasury experts and the representatives of the silver bloc.

The Dies-Thomas bill provided for purchases of silver by the United States Treasury in practically unlimited quantities, and for the issuance against the metal thus acquired of silver certificates, again in wholly unpredictable amounts. Three methods were laid down for the acquisition of silver.

First, the Secretary of the Treasury and the recently created Export-Import Bank were to go into the business of marketing abroad American agricultural surpluses in exchange for silver bullion and coin, the metal to be accepted at a premium of not less than 10 and not more than 25 per cent above its current world price.

Second, the Secretary was to be directed to nationalize stocks of silver held in the United States at a price not less than the highest world price on the day preceding the issuance of the nationalization proclamation.

And third, he was to be directed to purchase, after Jan. 1, 1935, not less than 50,000,000 ounces of silver a month, in addition to the amounts acquired through the sale of agricultural products, at prices to be fixed by himself. In no case, however, was the purchase price of silver to exceed $1.29 an ounce.

Against each ounce of silver, in whatever manner acquired, the Secretary of the Treasury was to be directed to issue $1.29 silver certificates, a part of which was to be used in payment for the metal purchased, while the remainder was to be retained by the Treasury as its profit and put into circulation by way of government expenditure. For some utterly unaccountable reason, not only silver certificates, but also all other forms of currency in the United States were to be made redeemable in silver coin.

The only limitation on the purchases of silver and, consequently, on the amount of inflation that they could occasion, was that the purchases were to continue only until the price of silver would rise to $1.29 an ounce, or until "the general domestic price level as measured by the index of the Bureau of Labour Statistics shall equal the price level of 1926." Thereafter they were to cease and be resumed only when either the price level or the price of silver would fall by as much as 3 per cent. Since no one could possibly foretell how much silver might have to be purchased in order to achieve either of these two objectives, the limitation would have been clearly of a most indefinite nature.

The new act jettisons most of the important features of the Dies-Thomas measure. The provision for marketing agricultural surpluses has disappeared altogether. So have the mandatory prescriptions with regard to specified monthly purchases of silver. So has also the absurd provision for the redemption of all American currency in silver dollars.

The silver purchase act does provide for purchases of silver by the Treasury, but in a more flexible manner and with a different sort of limitation. The only important mandatory feature is the declaration of policy that "the proportion of silver to gold in the monetary stocks of the United States should be increased with the ultimate objective of having and maintaining one-fourth of such monetary stocks in silver." Thus the amount of silver that the Treasury is obligated to purchase and hold is limited by the size of its gold holdings.

The word "ultimate," used in connection with the objective of the act, is of very great importance, particularly when taken in conjunction with the provision that the time in which, and the rate at which, that objective shall be attained are left to the discretion of the Executive. The act also empowers the President to nationalize all privately owned stocks of silver held in the United

CHAPTER II

NOW the people of Kong delighted in feats of skill, and excelled one against the other; and they practiced their games in divers places.

2. For many strove to hit a ball, even a small white ball, thousands of cubits. They hit them in the country-side, and continually prayed fervently that the light of day might extend until the round be finished.

3. For oft the way thereof it was rough, and evil spirits abounded, even as a bogey; and they exorcised the spirits, yea they put the spirits down, with many prayers and objugations. Yea verily their tongue it was strong with mighty sayings. For how else might they prevail?

4. And others served in the Courts with vigour, they were judges of fine points. And there was often talk of service and love, but little of charity. For one strove for advantage over against the other continually; one was set against the other.

5. Peradventure they favoured another game, named after a chirping insect, tho' none can tell the reason thereof. And the players prayed continually to their god, even to the god Owzat.

6. And they made a mystery of their craft, for one would seek to throw a ball over against another, and he that presideth would call him Noble. Yet again they would cross over, one against the other, and inscribe on the records a maiden, tho' no woman be within their bounds.

7. And there were other mysteries to guard the craft and also there was great controversy. For one would guard his cattle and stand squarely in front thereof.

8. And another would attack the castle, even the wicket-gate and perchance strike him who defended it. And there was great tumult; and ill-fame covered the craft.

CHAPTER 12.

Now the residue of the people delighted also in skill in games, especially skill in others. For it pleased them to show their skill as it were by proxy.

2. And there were many games that they favoured, and paid many shekels that they might direct; for those that clamoured to the gods and made the mightiest noise, behold that side would win.

3. There was an especial game, wherein all were leagued together; and the bystanders would call loudly upon the fowls of the air. They would curse with a terrible curse he who bore the scales, if it were they did not descend as they required of him, for such was their goal.

4. Many of the tribes, even the elders, pit the skill of horses one against the other, and wagered mightily on the result thereof, yea many shekels were gained and lost.

5. And they that oversaw these races made profit from the wagers, for it was the custom that they received a tithe; and the Elders moreover set round about tax-gatherers.

6. And the taxgatherers collected from all who wagered another tithe for the Elders, so these had great possessions thereby.

7. And it came to pass that there were seven lean years, even as had been foretold, and the people cast from them their evil habits and wagered not.

8. And the overseers of the races bewailed and cried Behold, our revenue decreaseth; they cried with a loud voice.

9. And the Elders hearkoned unto them and said, We will remit our taxes even the half thereof, that ye be not oppressed. Go ye in peace.

10. And he who sits at the receipt of custom reported saying, Behold the money in your coffers diminisheth; and they replied, Care ye not. Cannot we tax the residue of the people for are they not as a flock of sheep?

SAVIOUR OF GERMANY

HITLER'S TRIBUTE TO HINDENBURG

Berlin, Aug. 6.

Extraordinary precautions to restrain the populace marked today's meeting of the Reichstag, where Herr Hitler delivered his funeral oration on the late President von Hindenburg.

The huge crowd was kept back by ropes stretched between lamp-posts and specially erected wooden barriers, while the route to the temporary Reichstag building was lined with armed guards, standing shoulder to shoulder.

Nazi Black Guards carried revolvers and daggers, while mounted police carrying sabres were held in reserve.

Gaudy decorations festooned the Kroll Opera House, where the Reichstag is meeting, the building being covered with black crepe, evergreen garlands and white lilies.

Hitler passed the week-end preparing his oration, together with the speech he will pronounce tomorrow at the burial service at Tannenburg.

Two thousand privileged persons, including deputies, will hear Hitler, whose address will be preceded by an overture, played by a full orchestra of 100 musicians. This will be the only item of the ceremony to be broadcast, and will be heard over the whole of Germany and in many foreign countries, including Italy, America and Japan.

Later.

Shortly before Hitler left the Chancellory, two additional lines of police formed up with their backs to the procession, facing the crowd.

No member of the public is allowed within 200 yards of the Opera House, which is guarded by detachments of the Reichswehr.

It was noticable that Hitler's followers were also kept under close observation.

The proceedings in the packed Opera House opened with the playing of the overture, Beethoven's "Coriolanus."

Crown Prince Greeted.

One of the first arrivals at the scene of the ceremony was the former Crown Prince, Wilhelm, who was warmly greeted by General Blomberg.

All members of the Government were present by this time. Most of them were wearing brown shirts, like the Deputies. The Diplomatic Gallery was crowded.

Facing the auditorium was a great bust of von Hindenburg, decorated with a profusion of flowers.

Funeral Oration.

Herr Hitler, the new Reichspresident, wearing the simple brown uniform so much in evidence and a black arm band of mourning, and standing beside von Hindenburg's son, commenced his funeral oration in this atmosphere of tense silence.

Contrary to all expectation he did not refer to political conditions or the matter of the presidency.

"Von Hindenburg is not dead," he said. "He still remains with us." This was the key-note of Hitler's oration.

The whole address required only fifteen minutes. He praised von Hindenburg's services in the Austro-Prussian and Franco-Prussian wars and paid a tribute to his labours in the long following years of peace, and until 1911 when he retired from the Army.

Saviour of Nation.

The world first learned of von Hindenburg's name when the Kaiser entrusted him with with the command of Germany's armies on the Eastern Front, Hitler said. By defeating the Russians at Ortelsburg, von Hindenburg saved the German nation from utter destruction, he declared.

"The name of Von Hindenburg has become a symbolic expression for the indestructible and ever-renewed vitality of our people," said Hitler at one point.

The title of Reichspresident, he went on, had become inseparable from the name of the dead Field Marshal, and the greatest struggle in the world's history had been inseparably linked with the name of Hindenburg.

"As chief of the German Army he saved the nation from destruction. If the political leadership of our people in those days had been equal to the leadership of the Army, Germany would have been spared the deepest humiliation of her history," he asserted.

With this note of high praise he closed his oration.

The proceedings closed with the march of mourning, "Goetterdaemmerung."—Reuter.

PRISON FOR WORST U.S. CRIMINALS.

ALCATRAZ ISLAND TAKEN OVER

San Francisco, Aug. 6.

Alcatraz Island, a penitentiary in San Francisco Bay from which it is said there is no possible escape, has been taken over by the Department of Justice and prepared for the most desperate of this country's criminals.

Formerly a military prison, this 12 acres of jutting rocks surrounded by swiftly flowing currents is expected to be used for the incarceration of Harvey Bailey, George (Machine Gun) Kelly, Albert Bates and other desperadoes who are now in the Federal prisons at Leavenworth.

The Department of Justice first indicated that this so-called "American Devil's Island" would be the spot to isolate criminals last October, when Attorney General Cummings was in the midst of the government's drive on crime.

On June 19, seven officers at the Federal Penitentiary annex in Leavenworth, left for San Francisco where they began preparations for the transfer.

As soon as plans are completed, the desperate criminals will be moved into cells at Alcatraz, mainly for the purpose of stamping out the practice in many mainland prisons of inmates communicating with confederates on the outside.

Modern Prison.

Alcatraz Island, despite its 18th Century appearance, is equipped as one of the most modern of prisons. Popular belief had it at the time the government announced it would use the island, that Alcatraz would be a "Devil's Island."

In the sense that Alcatraz isolates its prisoners in much the same manner as the French penal colony in the Caribbean, this belief is true. But the similarity stops at that point.

Department of Justice officials say Alcatraz is sanitary and healthful, the original Devil's Island is believed to be the opposite.

Alcatraz has mild weather the year round; the French prison has tropical heat and rains throughout the year.

Few persons outside of prisoners and officials have ever set foot on Alcatraz. San Franciscans know it as a prison that from the shore looks like a medieval fortress with villas and turrets rising tier on tier above the waterline. Swift currents sweep around the rocky island, a mile and a half from the mainland. Only an expert swimmer could possible cover the distance to shore, and few would care to try to make the trip.

Spanish Fortress.

Spaniards, first to use the Golden Gate, had a fortress on Alcatraz. Prisoners working round the island continually dig up old gun replacements and the rock is said to be honeycombed with tunnels.

The island, up to now, has been principally used as a disciplinary barracks for erring soldiers of the Pacific Division. It was turned into a military prison during the Civil War and resembles a sanitarium with its cool cells and modern facilities.

Out of some 12,000 federal prisoners in Government institutions and 6,000 being boarded in State institutions, only the worst will be sent to Alcatraz—meaning Pelican in Spanish—it is understood. Selection will be made after consideration of the nature of a prisoner's crime, his behaviour record, the length of his sentence and the prospects of his reform.—United Press.

SOVIET HOAX

BRIGHT SIDE SHOWN TO TOURISTS

Riga, Aug. 6.

The hoaxing of foreign tourists in Russia, in order that they may carry home a rosy impression of the living conditions of the country, was the subject of a formal complaint to the Moscow authorities by Ilya Ehrenburg, one of the foremost Russian writers of the day.

The complaint declares that the Soviet Tourist Travelling Agency chaperones foreign visitors and surrounds them with a false atmosphere of prosperity and gaiety in special hotels, staffed with trained waiters, where plenty of food, music and dancing carefully prevents them from seeing the squalor and hunger which are the ordinary lot of the masses.

Ehrenburg says that the heroic achievements of the Soviet should be shown as well as the other side of the picture, represented by food queues, empty shops, ill-clad people and the brutalities of man to man.—Reuter.

NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE

YESTERDAY'S MARKET IRREGULAR

The following reports on the New York stock market have been received through Messrs. Swan Culbertson and Fritz: The Wall Street Journal report on yesterday's market:—

The Stock market was sharply downward, due to bearish business news but rallied later and became steady, due to the smart advance in gold and silver prices, due to inflation talk, together with the strength of grains, due to the continuation of the drought. The market closed irregular. There is nothing in the news to indicate any change in the policy of the Administration towards inflation. Many conservative traders believe there will not be any inflationary moves at least until the September financing is completed. It is believed, however, that silver purchases and silver printing will receive more attention in view of stimulating commodities. Curb stocks and bonds were downward, with the exception of Mining issues.

S.C. & F. New York office cable:—The market recovered fairly well from early weakness, especially metal issues, which responded to renewed inflation rumours. Rails were heavy. Atchison reports that car-loadings for one week up to August 4th were up 22 per cent over the same period last year. Crams reports that Automobile production for the week ended August 4th totalled 58,500, as against 59,400 for the preceding week. Woolworth sales for the month of July were off one-third of one per cent. from last year. International Nickel has declared a dividend of 15 cents, against dividends of ten cents for the two previous quarters. The American Iron and Steel Institute reports that steel operations are at 25.8 per cent. of capacity, which is off 3/10ths of one per cent. The magazine of the Steel Institute says that operations are off 3 points to 26-1/2% of capacity. The Chicago livestock handlers' strike has been settled. The Federal Reserve Board reports slow business improvement in the North-Eastern and South-Western areas. Business done:—780,000.

New York & Chicago commodity reports received through Messrs Swan, Culbertson & Fritz:—

Wheat:—Foreign interests bought heavily. The sentiment abroad is changing and they now believe that prices will go much higher. This was responsible for our advance. The situation still favours higher prices. The weather is hot and dry in the South, with scattered showers and moderate temperature in other parts of the Belt. A forecast of the weather indicates scattered showers in the South and South-West, but dry and hot in the middle States. The market is strong. We would buy on every setback.

Cotton:—The drought and inflation news checked selling but new buying is not in evidence. The weather in the Eastern cotton Belt continues to be favourable. The Trade buys moderately on declines. Spot cotton is quiet and the basis is firm. The American Crop Service estimate the Cotton crop at 9,400,000 bales. Continuation of the drought in Texas and Oklahoma and inflation possibilities are having a steadying effect, pending the Government report. A forecast indicates partly cloudy conditions in Oklahoma and generally fair conditions with no rains in Texas.

Rubber:—The market was firm on Trade and Commission House buying and prices look as if they may go higher.

NOTES SUPPLIED BY THE THEATRES

Why was she called "The Queen of Spades?" Why did austere and dignified statesmen fall under her spell? What secret charm did she hold over men that made her the most sought after, revered, yet most feared woman in Europe? All these startling facts from the climax which unmasked one of the most amazing spies in history "Madame Spy", Universal's newest picture, which comes to the King's Theatre on Wednesday with Fay Wray and Nils Asther in the featured roles. They are supported by Edward Arnold, Noah Berry, John Miljan, Vince Barnett, David Torrence and Rollo Lloyd. "Madame Spy" peers into the heart of a woman who placed love of country and duty over that of a man. The story of "Madame Spy" abounds with romance and adventure as it traverses the blood spattered fields of Europe. Fay Wray is seen as the exotic spy, who was prepared to lay her life down for her flag, but wouldn't give up the man she loved. Eventually she overcame the many obstacles in her path and achieved the one without losing the other. Karl Freund, who directed "The Mummy", with Karloff and "Moonlight and Pretzels," more recently, is responsible for the direction of this picture.

"Stand Up and Cheer"

"Stand Up and Cheer," one of the most elaborate motion pictures ever created by Hollywood, makes its appearance at the King's Theatre today. Produced for Fox Film by Winifield Sheehan in association with Lew Brown, the film is reported as the show of a thousand and one wonders. Among the many elements the film offers are hundreds of dazzling girls, a vocal chorus of 500, one thousand players, 335 scenes, 1,200 wild animals and five bands of music. The large cast assembled for this elaborate production includes such stellar names as Warner Baxter, Madge Evans, James Dunn, John Boles, Ralph Morgan, Nigel Bruce, Shirley Temple, Arthur Byron and Stepin Fetchit. In the supporting cast are a number of leading personalities from the stage and radio, among whom are Sylvia Froos, Jimmy Dallas, "Aunt Jemima," Nick Foran, Mitchell and Durant. Although musical in theme, the screen play contains a story that is timely and topical. The President of the United States appoints a famous Broadway, producer to the cabinet post of Secretary of Amusement. It is his duty to help restore prosperity by reviving the spirits of the people. Selecting the country's leading entertainments, the producer proceeds to amuse the nation with magnificent and lavish stage productions in which the wonders of the film are revealed.

"Six of A Kind"

Hollywood has five famous mixed comedy teams and three of them are together in Paramount's "Six of a Kind," now playing at the Central Theatre. Charlie Ruggles, Mary Boland, W. C. Field, Alison Skipworth, George Burns, and Gracie Allen are all in the cast. The other two teams are Wallace Beery and Marie Dressler, and Zasu Pitts and Slim Summerville. In "Six of a Kind," the Ruggles-Boland team starts an auto trip across the country. To help pay expenses, they take the Burns-Allen team along, but with annoying and laughable results. After escaping the perils of the Grand Canyon, they land in Nevada, where the situation is further complicated by W. C. Fields as a Nevada sheriff, Miss Skipworth as a hotel keeper, two detectives chasing Ruggles who is suspected of bank robbery, and other elements which add to the gaiety.

HYDE-LAY WINS BOWLS MATCH IN EMPIRE GAMES

NO TENNIS INTERPORT

HONGKONG UNABLE TO RAISE A MEN'S TEAM

AGAINST SHANGHAI

There will be no tennis interport between Hongkong and Shanghai this year. The Hongkong L.T.A. have found it impossible to accept an invitation to visit the northern port next month owing to the difficulties of team raising.

At one time prospects of sending a strong men's and ladies' team to Shanghai were very bright, but subsequently, H. D. Rumjahn and Ho Kau-lau expressed inability to get away owing to business calls. Other leading players found themselves in a similar position.

Up to this wek, however, it was hoped that a ladies' team might make the trip, and Shanghai were asked if they would care to stage a ladies' Interport.

PHILIPPINES VERY KEEN.

A reply has been received in which the Shanghai L.T.A., regret their inability to do this, so that the Shanghai-Hongkong Interport is once again shelved, at least for a few months.

In the meantime, the Philippines have expressed anxiety to be included in these tennis Interports, and a request from the Philippine Lawn Tennis Association for such a consideration, has been favourably received by the local Association.

It is more than likely that the Philippines will send a team to Hongkong next year. The Manila Bulletin states that an invitation has been received from Shanghai, and that the Philippines intend to despatch a team to the north this autumn.

CANADIAN SWIMMING SUCCESSES IN BRITISH EMPIRE GAMES

ENGLAND AND SOUTH AFRICA DO WELL ON THE TRACK

AUSTRALIAN ESTABLISHES NEW BRITISH RECORD

London, Aug. 6.

Findlay, the English athlete won the 120 hurdles final in the Empire Games at White City to-day, covering the distance in 15 1-5 seconds.

Hart of South Africa won the shot putt with a haul of 48 feet 1¾ inches.

In the pole vault, Apps and Gilbert both of Canada tied with a leap of 12 feet 6 inches, and Apps won the jump-off.

ENGLAND TO FORE.

South Africa scored again in the high jump, Thacker clearing the bar at 6 feet 3 inches to win.

England carried off the women's 440 yards relay, winning the event in 44 4-10 seconds.

British Guiana scored a merited success in the half mile final, which Edwards won in 1 minute 54 1-5 seconds, but the six miles race went to Penny of England, who had the excellent time of 31 minutes 3-5 seconds.

England recorded two achievements in the women's track events, Miss Hiscock of England won the 100 yards sprint in 11 3-10 seconds, and Miss Gladys Slunn, the English runner, captured the half mile in 2 minutes 19 4-10 seconds.

CANADA'S SWIMMING SUCCESSES.

At Wembley, where the swimming programme is being carried through, Canada and Australia enjoyed most successes.

The men's 100 yards backstroke was won by Francis of Scotland, his time being 65 1-5 seconds.

Ryan of Australia carried off the men's 1,500 metres free style, clocking 18 minutes 25 2-5 seconds, while the high diving went to Mather of England.

Miss Harding of England realised expectations by winning the women's 100 metres backstroke in 1 minute 13 4-5 seconds.

Miss Dewar of Canada was successful in the final of the 100 metres free style, which she clocked in 1 minute 3 seconds.

The 200 metres breast stroke went to Dennis of Australia, who covered the distance in 2 minutes 51 seconds, and thus established a new British record.

Hamilton of Scotland won the 200 metres breast stroke in 2 minutes 41 2-5 seconds.

Canada captured the 800 metres relay free style, beating the rest of the field in 8 minutes 40 3-5 seconds.

Canada were also successful in winning the women's 400 metres free style relay race, returning a time of 4 minutes 21 4-5 seconds.

Another big achievement for Canada was Miss Moss's diving victory, with 67.27 points.—Reuter.

Willard's Tennis Status

AUSTRALIAN STILL AMATEUR

At a meeting of the council of the New South Wales Lawn Tennis Association the position of A. Willard, the well-known player, was brought forward for discussion. It was stated that Willard's name appeared with that of the professional, J. O. Anderson, in an advertisement announcing that they would appear in matches to which an admission fee would be charged. A letter was received from Willard disclaiming any knowledge of the tournament.

A further letter from Willard's employees, Messrs. Best and Gee, informed the association that Willard was employed by them solely as a traveller. J. O. Anderson was engaged by them in his capacity as a professional tennis coach. Furthermore, they stated that Willard had on occasions hit a ball across a net to Anderson in a demonstration, but since it came to their notice that Willard's amateur status was endangered, the practice had ceased, as they had no desire to jeopardise his standing with the association.

The council decided to inform Messrs. Best and Gee that as long as Willard was not engaged in a demonstrative capacity with Anderson before pupils, his status would remain unaltered.

A TRAGEDY OF TENNIS SHORTS

[Lines recited at the prize-giving in the West of Scotland Tennis Championships, in which shorts were worn by lady competitors for the first time in the 49 years' history of the tournament.]

While people of an older age
Indulged in frowns and snorts,
The maiden took the tennis stage
Demure in silken shorts.
With airy grace her twinkling feet
So swiftly trod the ground,
That base-line drives and net-shots neat
Soon won the opening round
Next day she made spectators stare,
Who round the courts were seated,
For O! she wore another pair,
Most exquisitely pleated;
Her male opponent gazed aghast,
And as the maid had reckoned,
He feebly let her strokes go past,
So she won round the second.
Next day that naughty damsel dared
To play in shorts still shorter:
They were so cutely yoked and flared
Youths quarrelled to escort her;
She whirled about the courts so quick,
That after standing nine-all,
Her placing was so very slick
She won the semi-final.
Alas! that maiden bold next day,
Was placed in sorry quand'ry:
Each pair of shorts had gone astray
In somebody's steam laundry;
Although she 'phoned and wept and swore,
None could, alack! be found,
And, back in stodgy skirt once more,
She lost the final round.

NEW ZEALAND PLAYER BEATEN 21-19

LOCAL RINK TWICE DEFEATED: PAIRS ALSO LOSE

Hongkong yesterday figured prominently, but not too successfully in the Empire Games lawn bowls contests at White City. Arthur Hyde-Lay, our champion, played two singles matches, losing the first to Macdonald of Canada by a wide margin, but covering himself in glory by beating Keys of New Zealand. Earlier in the day, Keys had suffered defeat at the hands of Baker, the Rhodesian player.

Hyde-Lay played magnificently to win his second match by 21-19, and it recorded Hongkong's first success in the Games.

Fred Rapley and Cooper played fine fighting bowls in their pairs encounter against Hutchinson and Langford of Canada, and were only beaten by three shots after a clever exhibition of bowls.

Hongkong's rink, comprising Ramsay, J. F. McGowan, G. H. Sherriff and Hughie Nish (skip), suffered two reverses. In the first match they lost rather heavily to the Canadian rink by 19-10, but later they gave a fine account of themselves against New Zealand, losing only by 18-16.

GLAMORGAN SKITTLED OUT

O'REILLY WORKS HAVOC

AND WINS TALENT MONEY

London, Aug. 6.

The Australians look as though they are going to carry off most of the talent money offered by the Swansea tradesman in connection with their encounter with Glamorgan.

A big holiday crowd to-day saw the Australians at their best in the field, and Glamorgan narrowly escaped an outright defeat on the second day's play.

Declaring at their overnight score of 400 for 7, the Australians quickly played havoc with the county batsmen.

O'Reilly was in great form, and almost unplayable. Glamorgan were rapidly sent back for the meagre total of 112, O'Reilly capturing 7 for 37.

Following on, the Welshmen gave a somewhat better account of themselves, and at the close had scored 189 for 5, being still 189 behind with five wickets in hand.

Smart is almost certain to win the offer of £5 for the highest score made by a Glamorgan player. To-day he rattled up 75 before dismissal.—Reuter.

Two More Records Shattered

Oslo, Aug. 6.

More world's athletic records dropped to-day in the International meeting at Oslo.

The Americans, who are sweeping all before them, were in magnificent form.

Percy Beard, the American runner, also set new record figures for the 100 metre hurdles, doing the race in 14 2.10 seconds.—Reuter.

"STAY OUT OF MY LIFE!"

CHAPTER XXII

Amy had heard. Amy was running downstairs quickly as if to meet an expected danger. She looked at Jane silently, without any pretence of greeting, of welcome. It was Howard who broke the silence. "Jane wants to see Nancy," he said, "but I don't know—"

"Why do you want to see her?" asked Amy. "Why didn't you let me know you were coming?" She was terribly troubled, Jane felt, by her presence. And she had on an old, out-of-date blue house dress that should have made her look dowdy and shabby beside Jane's fashion, but didn't. Jane saw all this even while she composed her expression into pathos and pleading, and a little inward imp demanded why it was that Amy's beauty never needed good clothes to maintain it. Exasperating! Why, she was in her way, as splendid a figure as Howard!

They were waiting. Jane must win them, and particularly Howard. If she could do that he would influence Amy. She answered, pretending humility, "I was afraid you'd hide her from me. I do want to see her, Amy. That's natural, isn't it?"

Howard answered for Amy and his voice was cool. "It's rather belated, Jane. You gave the child to Amy absolutely and promised not to claim her. Now, if you're not going to keep that promise, we'll have to think things over. So, first of all, we want to know if that's in the back of your mind?"

"No, it isn't," said Jane, still more humbly. "The child belongs to you and Amy. I mean it. I won't make a scene—" she glanced up, faintly smiling. "I won't try and stage stuff, bursting into tears and clasping her to my bosom and that kind of thing, but there's no harm just in my looking at her and speaking to her, is there? Amy, please—do trust me, no matter what you think about me."

She felt that Howard was melting but she went on to Amy: "You know how awful everything was for me when I gave her to you, and you were so wonderful to take her—that was the one comforting thing out of that horrible time—I'd never have forgiven myself if I'd have let some stranger adopt her. I must have been out of my mind. I've been so ashamed, so awfully ashamed. I know you despise me!"

"I don't despise you," said Amy, "and neither does Howard. Don't drag up the past, Jane. I know you had a hard time. I realized it more afterward. It's only that Nancy's ours, and—I was startled—and alarmed for a minute, thinking you might want her. Of course you can see her. She's just ready for her supper and bed. Come along upstairs."

* * *

Jane arose gracefully and dropped the fur coat from her shoulders. As she followed Amy she noticed that the house was no better furnished than the first time she had seen it, it seemed to be all books. Howard did not go with them and she was sorry. She would have liked to have him witness her admirable behaviour. She wished he had been the one to give permission to see the child. She could have been so grateful to him. He stirred her. She could think only of him.

Amy opened a door. "This is the nursery," she said. "And this is Nancy." She hesitated, then added: "I must bring up her supper, Jane—you go ahead and speak to her. She won't be shy!"

She ran down to where Howard was standing uneasily in the living room. "I left them alone, Howard. I didn't want to hear Jane with her—at first, I mean. It's all right, don't you think? She means it, about not taking her? I won't give Nancy up, no matter what line she tries." She put her head against his shoulder to be reassured.

"She'd better mean it. And I'm sure she does, sweet. She doesn't want to start any scandal and she doesn't want to take on the care of a child, either."

"But Nancy's so darling, Howard; it makes me uneasy, I can't help it."

"Don't worry. She's not going to have Nancy. Not if I have to beat her over the head with the poker and throw her out on the pavement. Not now, or any time."

"I'm glad you're here." She hugged him hard. "Don't stir out of the house until she's gone, will you?"

"Not a step. If you need help, give a loud shriek."

Upstairs Jane was looking at her child with surprised disappointment. She had expected, from egotism rather than reason, that Nancy would be movingly beautiful, a small replica of herself at her best. She was not. To Jane's eyes she was not even pretty.

The little girl was sitting on the hearth rug, her cheeks flushed from the heat of the fire. She was already in her nightgown. Her bed, covers turned down, waited in the corner, and near her was the low table for her supper, with Amy's chair beside it. Solemn and wide-eyed, she returned Jane's gaze and because Jane was a stranger remarked politely, "Ha-yo," adding, after a second, "W'ere my muvver?"

"She's coming," said Jane, feeling perfectly idiotic. "You—you're Nancy, I suppose." She thought, "and why did they ever give her that name! I always detested it! Nancy! Such a silly-sounding name!" She advanced cautiously and sat down in Amy's chair, which roused Nancy's expectance. "Supper?" she asked, scrambling up.

* * *

She was tall for her age, but Jane did not know that. She seemed very small. Her hair was early and light, her eyes dark blue. Jane couldn't see in her the slightest resemblance to herself, or to Roger Thorpe either, and while that last was desirable, she did feel that she had been somehow cheated. "Upon my word," she said aloud, "you look more like Amy than you do like me!"

Nancy settled down again since the stranger had offered no supper. She had another rag doll, a little more battered than the one downstairs, and she began to rock it and sing to it in a wordless humming which stopped as Amy came in with a tray.

"Oh Jane, was she singing?" said Amy, excitedly. "Do you know, as tiny as she is, she can carry a tune? The other day she hummed part of Rubenstein's 'Since First I Met Thee' I'd been playing for Mother!"

"Do you expect her to be a musician?" asked Jane.

"I certainly do." Amy put the cereal, the milk and toast and junket on the table and Nancy sat down in her chair and waited to have the napkin tied around her neck. Then she began to eat, her little hand holding the spoon properly.

"I have no talent for music at all, any kind of it," said Jane.

"Oh well, I believe in environment rather than heredity," said Amy. Jane would have liked to slap her. She was sure that Amy understood her flat disappointment and was enjoying it. Amy wasn't disturbed now that she might take the child.

"I'm going to give her music lessons as soon as she's a bit older," went on Amy, "a few minutes every day. She's not going to be

Choked by tear gas and beaten with police clubs, rioters were hurled back and trucks roared through the picketed area to San Francisco piers, to load ships tied up for weeks by the longshoremen's strike. This photo was taken as rioters fled before the police attack, in which several were injured and many arrested.

"Here they come!" breathed waiting throngs outside Trinity Church in Newport, R.I. as Mr. and Mrs. John Jacob Astor, III, principals in the much discussed "society wedding of the century" emerged after the simple ceremony.

Tear bombs and gas guns played an effective part in routing the thousands of pickets and sympathisers who rioted in the San Francisco dock strike. The officers, wearing "tin hats" are shown in action during a melee in which two men were killed and more than 70 wounded.

IS IT WORTH IT? ASKS MISS DOROTHY ROUND

CHAMPIONSHIP TENNIS DRAWBACKS

MEANS CONTINUAL NEGLECT

Dorothy round, at twenty-four, became woman tennis champion of the world. She knows what it has cost her to become champion. She knows what it is worth to her, and she sees more realistically than most girls at Wimbledon just what being a champion means.

She talked to me very frankly about it, writes a Sunday Express correspondent.

"What does being a tennis champion mean?" She said.

"It means that I am away from home for about fours months of the year. I often feel homesick.

"It means inevitably that I cannot keep in touch with my old friends.

"I have been at home two weeks in the last two months. In those weeks I did nothing but answer letters.

"I still have my sense of values. "What are 'tennis friends' worth? This: when you are up you have plenty of friends. When you begin to decline again, as every player must sooner or later, they don't want to know you.

"Being a champion tennis player means that I have nothing to do all the winter.

"It means that although I am homesick when I am away all the travel unsettles me, so that I can't really settle down again at home.

"It means that, travelling about to tournaments and being away from home, I have really had rather a lonely time. At times!

"I am twenty-four.

"I was nineteen when I really determined to go on until I was champion. I always vowed I would throw my rackets in the sea then. But now I can't very well stop.

COST HUNDREDS.

"It has cost my father hundreds of pounds, I suppose, in seven years. That money has gone in hotels, travelling expenses, and equipment. He gave it willingly, because the whole family encouraged me to go ahead. I am delighted for them, and they are delighted for me.

"What shall I do in the future? I honestly do not know.

"I might have been doing my job as a gym mistress in a school, but that is gone now.

"Do you know that some of the girls who star at Wimbledon learn shorthand and typewriting in the winter so that they can get secretarial jobs?

"But when the summer comes they forget it all, and the next winter they have to begin all over again.

"That is how it is.

"What, for instance, shall I do this winter? It is the problem most girls at Wimbledon face.

SOON FORGOTTEN.

"I am touring Australian from October to March. After that I, in my particular instance, would like to work in a shop—a really nice shop.

"But I always meant to be a gym mistress.

"My father has spent the money that would have sufficed to train me as a gym mistress many times over.

"There cannot be much return for it. I may write some articles and perhaps a book.

"I do not know if I ever will.

"After all of it a tennis star is forgotten by the public in a year or two.

"I wonder sometimes, when I think of what I have done, what I shall do—is it worth it?"

FATE INTERVIEWED.

Dorothy Round might to-day still be unknown to fame if fate had not intervened.

When she was on holiday at the age of sixteen with her family in North Wales, at Pwllelli, her brother entered her for the local tournament there. She was badly beaten.

She would never have entered another tournament of her own accord, but her brother determined that she should go in for the junior tournament at Malvern. She went and she won it.

After that she began in earnest. She got into trouble at school for staying away a week at a time to play at tournaments, and only just scraped through her examinations.

The time came when Dorothy Round first came to Wimbledon. She felt a strange sensation on the court that all the spectators were looking at her feet and that she would trip up.

She did not get very far in that first year.

Now, six Wimbledons later, she has beaten them all.

USEFUL ADVICE

Collins On Doubles Play In Tennis

I. G. Collins paired up with F. H. D. Wilde for Wimbledon this year. With the recollection of the fine play Collins has reproduced at Wimbledon in the past with Dr. Gregory—few will forget their great fight in a five set final against Allison and Van Ryn in 1929—English enthusiasts welcomed the news that Collins was to compete again at Wimbledon after a year's absence.

His new partnership with Wilde possesses great possibilities. The young Middlesex player, so his various doubles partners say, is a natural doubles player with an instinct to play the right shot and be in the right position.

SUCCESSFUL PARTNERSHIP.

A successful partnership, says Collins, can only be built up by a pair who can thoroughly understand each other, and work together both on and off the court. "It is in the crisis that the real pair can just pull that little extra out. Many players can play good doubles when things are going well, but it is when one player is off form, or when the opposition produce whirlwind tennis, that the necessary qualities of the real pair are brought out. The difficult time has to be overcome until suddenly (it is hard to say why) the psychological moment does nearly always come when it is possible to fight back, and if the opportunity is seized, a match may often be pulled out of the fire.

"It is worth mentioning here how rarely brothers or husbands and wives have ever been able, over more than a short period, to form a successful partnership; probably they are each too keen for the other's sake to succeed; they are playing too much on their nerves, concentrating more for their partner than for themselves, to the detriment eventually of their own game. I have tried to emphasise that in doubles it is the temperament of the pair that is of more importance than their own actual playing ability."

Von Cramm's Meteoric Rise To Fame

Baron Gottfried von Cramm, the 1934 champion of France, is the son of Reichfreihord von Cramm who owns estates near Hanover.

Von Cramm first came into prominence at 18 years of age when he won the German junior championship at Frankfort in 1928. Three years later he began to make his mark in Continental play, and in 1932 assisted Germany in winning a place in the interzone final of the Davis Cup with D. Prenn when he beat F. X. Shields and gave H. E. Vines a a hard match. The same year he won the German championship, beating R. Menzel in the final and also repeated this victory in last year's German championship final. He is, of course, the present holder of the Wimbledon mixed doubles championship with Mme. Sperling.

Von Cramm will shortly enter the German Diplomatic Corps.

CYCLING THRILLS

Club Enjoy Another Successful Outing

There was a slightly lower attendance on the Sunday run of the Hongkong Cycling Club, under Mr. E. Munns, vice-Captain, which was scheduled to reach Castle Peak for refreshments and bathing shortly after noon. Several members having made arrangements to ride out direct to the rendezvous after tiffin, the morning party decided to reach the Cafeteria later than the time originally set, and therefore the leader made for Taipo and Fanling at a brisk pace. At the latter place a puncture provided excuse for refreshments, and gave time for a more leisurely inspection of the light and shade effects produced by a few small clouds on the local hills. A suggestion was made on resuming the run that the border road should be traversed and accordingly the party wended their way through Sheungshui to that less frequented route. The subsequent scramble along the side of the Canton-Kowloon Railway and the carriage of the machines over a bridge by the method of stepping from sleeper to sleeper with nothing else between cyclist and water provided many thrills and much merriment. The return to the Circuit was made at Dill's Corner (near Santin) and the remaining few miles to the Cafeteria was made at a steady pace. A time schedule of the spin showed the riders to have made Taipo in 1¼ hours, with Fanling half-an-hour later (inclusive of repair of puncture); the Cafeteria was reached after the border detour at 2 p.m. after four hours' riding.

The afternoon section did not put in an appearance until after 4.30 p.m., and after refreshments had been enjoyed the whole Club adjourned to the beach to indulge in swimming and sun-bathing. Another cup of tea was enjoyed on returning to the Cafeteria and the wheelmen then resumed the homeward trip at 5.40 p.m. A strong pace was established by the leader which brought the party without further mishaps or halts to Shamshuipo at 6.50 p.m.

The Hon. Secretary, Mr. H. G. Crayford, is proceeding on a health cruise, and during his absence the duties of Secretary will devolve on Mr. H. A. G. Keates, R.A.S.C., Wellington Barracks.

It should also be noted that the Club Headquarters are now situated in 23, Taipo Road, Shamshuipo, where a room has been made available for members by the Captain, Mr. C. Read, who has removed from No. 7 Fuk Wing Street.

LATHER SHAVE OR BRUSHLESS SHAVE
MENNEN GIVES YOU A BETTER SHAVE

MENNEN Brushless Shave is different from others. It is not greasy. It is actually a cream which wilts whiskers quickly and makes them easy prey for any razor. Being greaseless, it does not clog your razor guard or basin drain, does not soil your towels.

A clean, effortless shave is yours, whether you use Mennen Brushless Shave or Mennen Lather Shave (with or without menthol). Both wilt whiskers, both enable your razor to skim along without pull or scrape.

Take your choice, but be sure it is Mennen. And top off the shave with MENNEN TALCUM FOR MEN.

"STAY OUT OF MY LIFE!"

forced. But she's such a healthy, normal child—"

"She's not very good looking," broke in Jane, doubtfully.

"Oh she's no art calendar cherub, but she's perfectly shaped and her hair's got a natural curl! Her teeth have come through evenly so far and did you notice her hands and feet, and her lashes?"

Jane did not answer. She leaned back and looked around the room. It was very plain-looking, almost poor. But there was something here and in the whole house—Amy had it, too, Amy in her shabby dress—something balanced and warm and restful and well ordered. She couldn't define it. It was like that Vermeer painting she had seen in one of the exhibitions and lingered before, trying to analyze its charm. This undefined something—it reduced her own importance, made her an outsider and of no account. It was all of a piece with the child not looking like her.

* * *

Her gaze came back to the child. Nancy had finished her supper and her head was drooping. "She's ready for bed," said Amy. Then, with an effort, "Jane—wouldn't you like to kiss her goodnight?"

"Well—yes" She didn't especially want to, and the kiss was rather awkward, but Jane was surprised by the fragile softness of the cheek and the delicious fresh orris and violet flower smell of it. "Why, isn't she sweet!" she exclaimed.

"She is sweet," said Amy. "And she's the most loving and gentle baby!" She tucked Nancy in, opened the window ventilator, pushed the screen tight before the fire. "But she's got a temper, too. And she chatters like a monkey now that she's learning to talk. She was quite to-night because she was so sleepy."

Back in the living-room again with Howard, Jane pulled herself together, but she felt constrained and did not know how to begin what she wanted to say, but she certainly wasn't going to leave without making Howard really look at her and think of her. "You've been wonderful to her," she began tentatively, "I wish—I wish you'd let me do something for her, give her something, too."

"It would be better all around if you didn't do that," said Howard. "We'd rather not."

Ah, now he must at least argue with her. "But why? And we might as well look at the practical side of things. As she grows older there'll be a good bit of expense, schools and college and so on. Why shouldn't I establish a—a fund—to—to help with all that? I'd—I'd love to—"

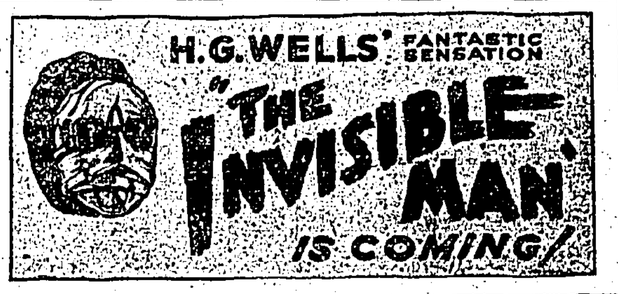

"No," said Amy. "We'll manage to give Nancy sufficient education, and anyway that's a long time ahead."

Jane still spoke to Howard: "You don't want her to have anything from me? That isn't kind, that isn't fair. You don't need to let her know where it comes from. I want to do this for my own peace of mind, it'll make me feel a little better about her. You're cruel."

Buoyant Health.

Out in the sunshine for hours on end, day after day, happy care-free days, that is the time when you know the real joy of perfect health.

But holidays for most people come round so seldom, and the daily routine of life often entails such long tiring hours that it is no easy matter to maintain one's health.

The secret of good health lies in the condition of the blood stream, and it is due to their unique ability to create new, rich, red blood that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have proved so effective in the treatment of all manner of ills which have their origin in a poor condition of the blood.

When you are run-down for any reason do not neglect the early symptoms such as headaches, pains in the back and limbs, or if you tire too easily. These are all signs that your blood is becoming impoverished and your immediate need is a course of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, the blood creating, nerve-strengthening tonic which has proved of benefit to men and women for a period of more than fifty years.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are the prescription of a physician, an M.D. of Edinburgh University, and their health-giving merits have recently been put to tests in the light of modern scientific knowledge.

As a result it has been proved that these pills are definitely able to increase the haemoglobin content of the blood, haemoglobin being the substance which conveys oxygen from the lungs and nutriment from the food digested in the intestines to every cell and tissue of the body. Equally good for both men and women, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills may also be given to children with perfect safety, and they are especially helpful as a builder after illnesses. From chemists everywhere.

WITHOUT A PERMIT.

TEACHER IN POSSESSION OF REVOLVER

Describing himself as a school-teacher travelling from Hankow to Canton, Li Yuen-fuk, 34, was charged at the Kowloon Magistracy before Mr. J. H. B. Lee yesterday with being in possession of a .38 Smith and Weston short revolver without a permit from the Inspector General of Police.

It was alleged by Detective Inspector Rozeskwy that at 1.15 a.m. on August 5, a Chinese constable engaged on search duty on the s.s. Suiyang found the revolver in the possession of the defendant. The constable found defendant lying on a deck chair on the after deck. Defendant was asked to get up to be searched, and, as he was complying with the constable's request, he gripped a blanket on which he had been sitting.

Hidden in Blanket.

As the constable was about to search him, something fell on the deck from the blanket. The constable picked it up and found it to be a revolver wrapped up in a handkerchief.

Defendant denied all knowledge of the revolver. He admitted that he was lying on the deck chair when the constable asked him to get up in order to be searched; but he stated that he had never seen the revolver before and did not know from where it came.

In evidence defendant stated that he was a school-teacher and was returning from Hankow to Canton. He had gone on deck for fresh air just prior to the ship's sailing and did not know that he had just been sitting on the revolver when he was asked to get up.

His Worship: Was the ship just about to sail?

Inspector Rozeskwy: Yes, your Worship. It sailed a few minutes after the Police search-party had left.

Expressing disbelief at the defendant's story, his Worship convicted him, and imposed a fine of $250 or three months' imprisonment.

CONTRACT BRIDGE

By W. E. McKenney

Solution to Previous Contract Problem

Are you a groove player? In other words, do you play your cards mechanically? If so, you are not going to win at contract any more than a pitcher in a baseball game is going to win if he puts the ball in the groove to a home-run hitter.

Usually your opportunity for a good defensive play comes early in the hand, and therefore you have to do a lot of careful thinking. It is not always hard to plan your play when there are only three or four tricks remaining, so it requires more care early in the hand to put up a good defence.

Duplicate—N. and S. vul.
Opening lead—♥ J.

| South | West | North | East |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 ♣ | Pass | 1 ♠ | Pass |
| 2 ♣ | Pass | 2 ♠ | Pass |
| 2 N. T. | Pass | 3 ♠ | Pass |
| 4 ♠ | Pass | Pass | Pass |

South's bidding is of the constructive type. When North continues to re-bid spades, he, of course, is desirous of signing the hand off, but he is also giving South valuable information with each bid.

The first spade bid might show only four spades, but each re-bid shows one more spade. So when North goes to three spades, he informs his partner that he holds either six spades or an exceptionally strong five-card spade suit.

The Play

East's opening lead is the jack of hearts. South plays the king, West wins the trick with the ace. West then cashes the queen of hearts and now, if he will continue the third heart, even though declarer is going to be able to ruff in dummy, the contract will be defeated, because West then will be sure of making his king of spades and ace of clubs.

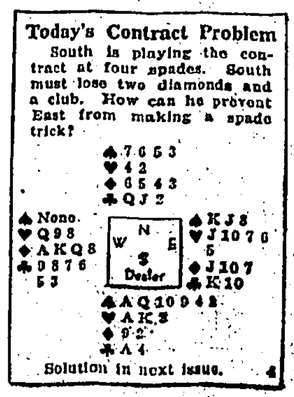

However, when the hand was played, West made the mistake of returning the jack of diamonds, which South won with the ace. South returned the king of clubs, and West won the trick with the ace.

Here again he missed an opportunity to defeat the hand. If he had held off the first club, won the second club trick, and returned the third club, the contract would have been defeated. Or if, after winning this trick with the ace of clubs, he led a heart, the contract could be defeated. But again West made the mistake of returning a diamond, which South won with the king.

South now led the queen of spades and let it ride. When it held, a small spade was played and the jack finessed. The ace of spades then picked up West's king and now the six of clubs was an entry into dummy and the losing heart was discarded on the jack of clubs. In this manner the declarer made four odd.

Today's Contract Problem

South is playing the contract at four spades. South must lose two diamonds and a club. How can he prevent East from making a spade trick?

Solution in next issue.

SIX MEN NEEDED TO SUBDUE WOMAN

Considerable excitement reigned at the Great Eastern Boarding house, Connaught Road, Central, yesterday, when it was found that one of the recent inmates, a woman, was apparently demented. It took six men to bind her and remove her.

It was not until 3.30 p.m., two and a half hours after her arrival at the boarding house, that she began to show signs of not being in her proper senses, by throwing things about, and attempting to assault the book-keeper.

The woman arrived at the hotel about 1 p.m., and registered as Chau Li-sze. She had apparently arrived from Shanghai in the morning. She looked about 27 years of age, and was heavily built.

On arrival she booked room No. 128, but soon after wanted it changed. She was then given another room, but wanted that changed, and finally she was given room No. 55, which overlooks the harbour.

Queer Behaviour.

About 3.30 p.m. she began to act queerly, by throwing things about and banging the doors of her room. She also attempted to assault the book-keeper, and at times cried out, and laughed hysterically.

The management of the boarding house at first did not take any steps, but when it was seen that she continued in her ridiculous actions they sent a telephone call to the Central Police Station about ten p.m., fearing the woman would try to throw herself from the verandah into the street below.

Before the arrival of the Police, the woman locked herself in her room. Employees of the boarding house had been stationed on the verandah to guard against any attempt on her part to jump over.

Sergeant Baldwin arrived shortly after, and a message was sent for the ambulance, which was soon on the scene. The advent of the ambulance men was the moment for resistance on her part.

Frantic Struggles.

At first persuasive methods were tried, but to all she turned a stubborn front, and kicked and bit at anyone who approached her. Four Chinese officers attempted to bind her up. She offered a stout resistance, and fought furiously, and Sergeant Baldwin and a few others had to give help to the Chinese officers.

Meanwhile a large crowd had collected in the street outside. The woman, however, seemed to have tired herself out by her exertions, and submitted to being bound on a stretcher.

The Police are engaged in tracing her movements and relations. She had informed the hotel management she had a brother living in Hongkong, but left no address.

BOTH PARTIES GUILTY.

SHIP'S OFFICER STRUCK WITH RULER

"Both parties are guilty of assault, but the defendant actually used a weapon and injured the complainant," remarked Mr. E. W. Hamilton at the Central Magistracy yesterday in imposing a fine of $10 on Kwok So, a shop foki, who was charged with assaulting Mr. Andrew Tipo, Chief Engineer of the steamship On Lee, on August 1.

Det.-Sergt. Gowans stated that on Wednesday, at 6.30 p.m. accused boarded the ship to collect some money for his master. He was told that the boat was scheduled to sail at 7 p.m., and asked to return on the next trip. Mr. Tipo pushed him out. Accused refused to go and it was alleged took a ruler from his pocket and struck Mr. Tipo on the forehead and ear.

Mr. Tipo was removed to the Government Civil Hospital where his wound was attended to. The sailing was consequently delayed for an hour.

The complainant, in evidence, stated the balance of money due was $23, and admitted pushing the defendant out of his cabin. A Chinese constable, who was on search duty, deposed to seeing the defendant strike the complainant on the face with a foot rule.

"You better pay your debt," remarked the Magistrate, "You must not take the law into your own hands."

THEFT OF PISTOL.

FORMER ST. LOUIS INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLBOY CHARGED

The lapse of a former St. Louis Industrial School boy was related to Mr. J. H. B. Lee at the Kowloon Magistracy yesterday, when Chu Chan-sang, 22, was charged with being in possession of an automatic pistol and three rounds of ammunition without a permit from the Hon. Inspector General of Police and with stealing the pistol from Rev. Fr. D. F. Hourigin, of the Salesian Training School, Shaukiwan.

A woman named Ho Yee-mui was also charged with possession in connection with the same revolver, but she was discharged as the Police had no evidence to offer against her.

Detective Sergeant Poyntz told the Court that a party of Police raided 141 Kilung Street, where they found defendant and the woman in one of the cubicles. The automatic pistol, with the three rounds of ammunition, was found inside the cubicle.

Exemplary Character.

Defendant, it was stated, was a former St. Louis Industrial School boy. He came down from Shanghai eight years ago, and was taken into the St. Louis Industrial School shortly afterwards. He was taught a trade during his six years with the School and left in June 1932. Since then he had been doing odd jobs as a tailor.

On July 16, defendant went to the Salesian Training School at Shaukiwan, and, when nobody was around, sneaked into Father Hourigin's room and stole the pistol.

Sergeant Poyntz said defendant had been known to Father Hourigin for some years both in Shanghai and Hongkong. Father Hourigin would say that apart from this lapse the defendant's character had been exemplary.

While they had no record of him, the Police nevertheless took a serious view of the case because the pistol might have fallen into the hands of evilly-disposed persons.

On the charge of possession, defendant was fined $50 or one month, and, on the charge of theft, $10 or 14 days.

NEW ORLEANS SCANDAL

PUBLIC PROTEST GATHERING

FEUD GOES ON

(Special to "Telegraph")

(By Telegraph. Copyright. Telegraphic Messages Ordinance, 1891. Received August 7, 11.38 p.m.)

New Orleans, Aug. 6.

The scandalous situation arising from the political feud between office-holders in the State and the city is causing widespread public protest.

Over two thousand people demonstrated in the City Park today, denouncing Senator Huey Long and Walmsley, and demanding that the $20,000 weekly cost of the military display should be spent on relief for the destitute.

Yesterday's information was, it will be recalled, that fifteen hundred people were faced with starvation, the Federal agencies having withdrawn relief supplies because of the failure of the Legislature to vote their share of the cost.

The worried militia and the police joined forces during the demonstration, to prevent it from developing seriously, and then resumed their display of enmity. —United Press.

ANOTHER ABSURD RUMOUR

WAR FEAR ATTACHED TO GOLD MOVE

(Special to "Telegraph")

(By Telegraph. Copyright. Telegraphic Messages Ordinance, 1891. Received August 7, 12.18 p.m.)

New York, Aug. 6.

Officials of the Denver Mint declined to comment on rumours that a thousand million dollars in gold is being moved inland from San Francisco because of the possibility of war.

They merely drew attention to the statement made by the San Francisco Mint that the transfer was being effected merely because the San Francisco Mint is to be re-built.—United Press.

(Special to "Telegraph")

(By Telegraph. Copyright. Telegraphic Messages Ordinance, 1891. Received August 7, 11.16 a.m.)

New York, Aug. 6.

Dramatic wireless messages from Little America indicate that Admiral Byrd is cut off from his base.

A tractor is now endeavouring to fight its way through a fierce blizzard in an attempt to reach and relieve the outpost where Byrd is isolated.—United Press.

M. P. TO BECOME AN ACTOR?

MR. MCGOVERN GIVEN COACHING

London, Aug. 6.

Hollywood has been outdone by a British film producer who, it is said, is trying to coach Mr. John McGovern, the Clydeside M.P. to take the part of a working-man M.P. in a stirring film drama having for its centre-piece the turmoils of British politics.—United Press.

Pressure is highest over the Pacific to the east of Japan. The typhoon is situated near Naha, moving north-west. Local forecast:—W. and S.W. winds, moderate; fine generally.

GOVERNMENT CONTROL OF MONEY AND CREDIT

REVOLUTION IN FINANCE LIKELY IN U.S.A.

PROPOSAL PREPARED

Washington, Aug. 6.

A revolutionary change in American currency control is foreshadowed.

The creation of a central bank of issue, which would take over the entire functions of the Federal Reserve Bank system, and which would place the control of credit and currency directly in the hands of the Government, is stated in official circles here to be under consideration by the Administration.

It is indicated that the necessary legislation may be prepared in time for submission to the next session of Congress.

The matter will probably be presented to President Roosevelt for final study when he reaches the capital on his return from his present tour.

The House Banking Committee was ready to report on a measure for the establishment of a central monetary authority last session, but the plan was dropped after reference to the White House.

IMPORTANT STEP

The present proposal is regarded as very important in view of the Government's borrowings for refunding and for the emergency relief expenditures.—Reuter.

MINNEAPOLIS LATEST

INJUNCTION SOUGHT AGAINST OLSON

(Special to "Telegraph")

(By Telegraph. Copyright. Telegraphic Messages Ordinance, 1891. Received August 7, 9.23 a.m.)

Minneapolis, Aug. 6.

The United States District Court has ordered Governor Olson to appear before the Court on Wednesday to show cause why an injunction restraining him from enforcing martial law should not be issued.

The attorneys of the employers in the lorry dispute have filed the suit requesting an injunction.—United Press.

THE EXPLANATION.

It is revealed that the injunction suit was filed when the Governor, his ire aroused by the employers' refusal to compromise with the lorry-drivers, revoked 9,000 trucking permits and said that they would only be re-issued to those who were prepared to accept the compromise terms.

This action saw dozens of employers accept and commence the re-employment of union workers.

The recalcitrants went to court. —United Press.

TRUNK FULL OF BONES

TEDDINGTON MAN'S CAUTION

London, Aug. 6.

A cautious gentleman has handed the Teddington Police a trunk containing four human skulls and fifty arm and leg bones which, he states, have been in his garden for the past twenty-five years. He said he could have buried it but was afraid someone would dig it up and accuse him of murder.

The bones were collected by his father about 1874, when he was engaged in demolition at St. Giles Within Church, London.—United Press.

Ajaccio, Aug. 6.

The Corsican town of Ajaccio benefits handsomely under the will of the late M. Francois Coty, who died last week.

It is announced that twenty-five million francs, which must be devoted to public works, have been left to the town under the will of M. Coty, who was the millionaire perfume manufacturer, who was a native of Ajaccio.

The will also leaves half a million francs to Ajaccio charities.—Reuter Special.

NO WAR FOR TEN YEARS

PSYCHOLOGY RIGHT: FINANCES WRONG

PARIS INTERVIEW

PARIS, AUGUST 7.

MR. LLOYD GEORGE HAS COME OUT TO-DAY AS A PROPHET OF PEACE.

"I am willing to guarantee," he says in an interview published in to-day's issue of the Petit Journal, "that the nations of Europe have no need to fear another major war for ten years."

There is no question that Germany is unable to make war at present, he said.

It is true, he agreed, that the psychological conditions necessary for war are present, but the material facts must be taken into consideration and they rule out war at the present time.

TROUBLE VISITED ON FAR EAST

Mr. Lloyd George blamed the development in the Far East for the creation of tension, uncertainty and suspicion in Europe.

"I, as head of the British Government in the Great War know how such a war has to be conducted.

"That is why I cannot admit the possibility of war to-day.

"But," he added, "there is no doubt that by letting Japan do as she liked in Manchuria, we (Britain and France) encouraged German militarism."—Reuter.

OTHER OPINIONS.

In the recently-published book, "Will War Come to Europe?," H. R. Knickerbocker gives the following answers which he received from leading statesmen during a tour of Europe:

President Masaryk of Czechoslovakia: "There will be no war because there is no money."

Foreign Minister Benes of Czechoslovakia: "Fifty-fifty chances of war in five years."

Regent Horthy of Hungary: "There will be no war. It is too great a risk."

King Alexander of Jugoslavia: "No war will start in the Balkans."

King Boris of Bulgaria: "War is incredible so long as the generation that experienced the last war is in power."

Chancellor Dollfuss of Austria: "The peace of Europe depends on the independence of Austria."

Barthou, French Foreign Minister: "A year ago I wrote that war could not possibly come in 1934. To-day I could no longer express the same opinion."

Julius Goemboes, Hungary's Premier: "Peace for ten years? I did not say that, but I fervently hope so."

Mussolini: "Peace for ten years."

Winston Churchill, in the House of Commons: "I dread the day. It is not far distant. It is perhaps only a year, or perhaps 18 months, distant."

CUPID AND MISS ISHBEL

MORE RUMOURS OF ENGAGEMENT

"SUITOR" TOO LATE

Glasgow, Aug. 6.

Rumours of the engagement of Miss Ishbel MacDonald, daughter of the British Premier, are abroad again.

The occasion for them was the arrival in England of young and handsome Professor King Gordon, of Winnipeg, son of Ralph Connor, the famous novelist.

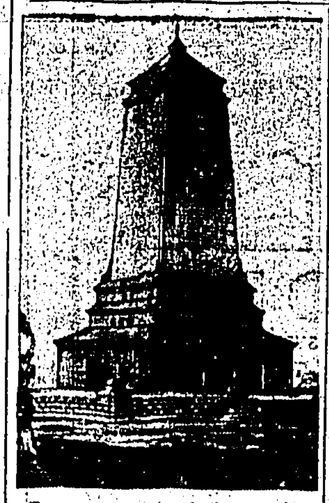

Their names have often been linked together, and Gordon admitted to the United Press that he had hoped to see her. Unfortunately for him, however, Miss Ishbel had left for her Canadian holiday. She accompanied her father when he departed on July 11 on his rest cure in Canada.

Professor Gordon, in an interview with the United Press, refused to confirm the reports of his engagement to Ishbel. "Ishbel and I have always been asked about it," he said, "but we are very good friends. That is all."

The engagement of Miss Ishbel and Professor King Gordon was first rumoured about six months ago. They became very good friends during the Ottawa conference in 1932, and in the following year Professor Gordon came specially from Canada to attend the wedding of Ishbel's sister, Doctor Joan MacDonald.

When Miss MacDonald was once asked if the reports were true, she refused either to confirm or deny the suggestion. She merely remarked that she herself did not know the full details.

The Professor is leaving Scotland shortly with a party of fifteen other Canadians to study conditions in Russia.—United Press.

Four monuments similar to that above are, it is reported, to be erected at Changchun, Taitsihar, Harbin and Chengteh, in commemoration of the "martyrs" who fought for the establishment of the Empire of Manchukuo.

$100,000 BAIL ESTREATED

REIFEL CASE DEVELOPMENT

FATHER EXCUSED

Seattle, Aug. 6.

Federal Judge Meterer to-day ordered George Reifel to forfeit the bond of $100,000 on which he was released.

It will be recalled that Henry and George Reifel, both Canadians, the father being President of Brewers and Distillers of Vancouver, Ltd. were charged with smuggling large quantities of liquor into the North-West States.

The Government has also brought civil suit against them for $17,250,000, for alleged evasion of Customs dues and taxes.

Neither George nor his father Henry appeared in court a week ago, when they were ordered to, and the Government consequently asked for forfeiture.

TOO ILL TO APPEAR.

In the case of the elder Reifel, Henry, the Court granted a continuance of his $100,000 bond until August 20, his counsel pleading that he was too ill at Vancouver to appear.

It was also claimed that the son was at his father's bedside, but the Judge described his failure to appear as wilful and estreated his bail.

Evidence was given that two United States surgeons were refused admittance to the hospital where Henry Reifel is lying.—Reuter.

COSTES CRASH RUMOURS

Paris, Aug. 6.

Captain Costes arrived safely at Brindisi and left immediately for Athens after re-fuelling. He did not meet with any accident.

An earlier unconfirmed Rome report suggested that the famous French flier had crashed in the Alps on his way to Italy and had been seriously injured.—Reuter.

With regard to the letter from "Protestant Christian" which appeared in our issue of yesterday, it should be stated that there was no "blessing" of the graves on the occasion of the pilgrimage to the Morrison tombs in Macao cemetery on Wednesday last.

SAVAGE FIGHTING IN ALGERIA

DRUNKEN JEW'S ESCAPADE

MUSSULMAN REPRISALS

(Special to "Telegraph")

(By Telegraph. Copyright. Telegraphic Messages Ordinance, 1891. Received August 7, 9.03 a.m.)

Algiers, Aug. 6.

Savage fighting arising from religious antagonisms occurred to-day in the city of Constantine.

Twenty were killed and seventy were severely wounded.

The origin of the disturbances appears to have been the visit of a drunken Jewish Zouave to one of the Constantine mosques during prayer.

He began insulting the Mussulmans and their religion, and the latter then invaded the Jewish quarter, attacking the Jews.

Fighting raged through the quarter all last night.

PEACE AND WAR.

To-day, the delegates of the two parties met at the Town Hall and arrived at a peaceful settlement, but no sooner had they separated than fighting started again on a big scale.

A strong force of Mussulmans marched down the main street in the Jewish quarter and set fire to houses.

Knives, revolvers and bludgeons were freely used in the ensuing battle.

Calm has since been restored.—Reuter Special.

MAN OF MANY PARTS

BEGGAR, THIEF AND ACTOR

First a beggar, Wong Kam-shik was run in by the police and later decided to turn thief. He was not a success in his new profession and received three months when he was caught. After his discharge he resorted to begging again. Arrested again, he was sentenced and on his release was banished from the Colony. Since then he has returned twice.

Over the week-end, Wong Kam-shik was again caught by the police. Brought before Mr. J. H. B. Lee at the Kowloon Magistracy this morning, he claimed to have become an actor. He said he was a member of a Chinese theatrical troupe with an engagement in Hongkong and had to come here as the show could not be put on without him.

His Worship: You are indispensable, eh?

Defendant: Oh, yes!

His Worship: I am afraid the show will have to do without you for sometime. I sentence you to one year.

CHILE BREAKS OFF RELATIONS WITH PARAGUAY

ASUNCION CHARGES OF BREACH OF NEUTRALITY

(Special to "Telegraph")

(By Telegraph. Copyright. Telegraphic Messages Ordinance, 1891. Received August 7, 9.23 a.m.)

Washington, Aug. 6.

It is learned that Chile is breaking off diplomatic relations with Paraguay, one of the participants in the Gran Chaco War.

The dispute arises out of the campaign in the Gran Chaco.

It appears that certain Paraguayan newspapers published reports alleging that the Chilean Government had been guilty of violating the international law of neutrality.

Demands were sent to Asuncion for an explanation of the statements in the Paraguayan newspapers, but no satisfactory explanation was forthcoming, and it is authoritatively learned in diplomatic circles in Washington that Chile intends to withdraw her Minister from Asuncion.—United Press.

IF CHILD IS CROSS WON'T EAT

Take Doctor's Advice
Results Will Surprise You

If your precious child won't eat without coaxing, is nervous and underweight . . . do what doctors the world over advise: Give him a little Castoria and you will see a marked improvement the first day.

Authorities have found intestinal absorption of poisons to be the cause of most child ailments. Even when the child's habits may seem regular, poisons seep through the system and do damage. The stomach is upset. Foods do not digest properly. The nerves lose their delicate balance.

Nothing can correct this insidious condition quite as easily and naturally as Castoria. It tastes so good children beg for it. And it swiftly purges the little system of poisons. It settles the stomach, improves digestion and restores nerve-poise. Then Nature does the rest as only Nature can. Appetite for food quickly returns. Health is restored to normal. And as a result the child gains weight fast and becomes sturdy and strong.

Now take care of your child this safe, drugless way. Get a bottle of Castoria and try it. Results will delight you.

LIGHT AS A SUMMER BREEZE, THESE FROCKS . . . .

Subtly Designed Featherweight Crepes Fashion Smartest Evening Gowns

A printed crepe evening gown (left) has a yoke of black organza trimmed with rows of ruffles. Form fitting and cool-looking, the frock ends in a short train. Another flattering formal dress (right) has flowers and leaves in subtle colours printed crepe background.

By Marian Young

New York.

Featherweight crepes in summery printed designs fashion some of the smartest evening gowns that chic women are wearing on hot nights. Of course organza, mousseline, lace, net and novelty cottons are much in evidence and very handsome they are too.

Women who have a penchant for crepe but feel that filmsy, rather ethereal fabrics must have a place in a summer wardrobe can, so to speak, eat their cake and have it, because many printed crepe gowns are trimmed with wisps of tulle, mousseline and net. And they're charming.

For instance, the youthful printed evening gown, sketched here at the left, has a yoke of black organza, edged with rows and rows of ruffles. The gown itself is extremely form-fitting and ends in a short train. The print—blue and yellow flowers on a black background—is as cool-looking a frock as one could own.

• • •

Subtle designs are prevalent throughout the collections of midsummer prints. And motifs in medium sizes have practically replaced the small all-over and the very large floral patterns of last season. One particularly flattering evening gown (right) has a yellow background with medium-sized floral and autumn leaf designs in soft shades.

The neckline of the dress is quite low (incidentally necklines are getting lower while trains seem to be getting shorter) and there are circular godets in the skirt to give that billow, frothy effect that every one loves. It is quite plain, depending on lines to give it individuality.

GLORIFYING YOURSELF.

Mental Attitude Bears Directly on Beauty

By Alicia Hart.

Your face, generally speaking, is a telltale. It shows what you're really like inside, what you think of others and how you feel about this world in which you live.

If you are a tolerant, sympathetic person with a generous nature, your eyes will be kindly and the corners of your mouth will turn up instead of down. If, on the contrary, you often think meanly, vindictively and enviously of others and feel that life is hopeless, your eyes will have a hard, bright look about them and there will be unlovely lines around your mouth and across your forehead. The way to have beautiful thoughts and to live a wholesome, interesting life.

Get into the habit of being happy and of thinking nice things about others. Learn to enjoy your job and see how much easier it is to accomplish the routine tasks that you have to do. Every time that you catch yourself judging someone else too harshly, try to put yourself in his or her place and it's more than likely that you will find yourself thinking up excuses for the person. Try to overlook the defects in others and to see their good points instead. Remember that none of us is perfect. By judging other people as you'd have them judge you, you're sure to be happier, and therefore more beautiful.

"STAY OUT OF MY LIFE!"

CHAPTER XXII

Amy had heard. Amy was running downstairs quickly as if to meet an expected danger. She looked at Jane silently, without any pretence of greeting, of welcome. It was Howard who broke the silence. "Jane wants to see Nancy," he said, "but I don't know—"

"Why do you want to see her?" asked Amy. "Why didn't you let me know you were coming?" She was terribly troubled, Jane felt, by her presence. And she had on an old, out-of-date blue house dress that should have made her look dowdy and shabby beside Jane's fashion, but didn't. Jane saw all this even while she composed her expression into pathos and pleading, and a little inward imp demanded why it was that Amy's beauty never needed good clothes to maintain it. Exasperating! Why, she was in her way, as splendid a figure as Howard!

They were waiting. Jane must win them, and particularly Howard. If she could do that he would influence Amy. She answered, pretending humility, "I was afraid you'd hide her from me. I do want to see her, Amy. That's natural, isn't it?"

Howard answered for Amy and his voice was cool. "It's rather belated, Jane. You gave the child to Amy absolutely and promised not to claim her. Now, if you're not going to keep that promise, we'll have to think things over. So, first of all, we want to know if that's in the back of your mind?"

"No, it isn't," said Jane, still more humbly. "The child belongs to you and Amy. I mean it. I won't make a scene—" she glanced up, faintly smiling. "I won't try and stage stuff, bursting into tears and clasping her to my bosom and that kind of thing, but there's no harm just in my looking at her and speaking to her, is there? Amy, please—do trust me, no matter what you think about me."

She felt that Howard was melting but she went on to Amy: "You know how awful everything was for me when I gave her to you, and you were so wonderful to take her—that was the one comforting thing out of that horrible time—I'd never have forgiven myself if I'd have let some stranger adopt her. I must have been out of my mind. I've been so ashamed, so awfully ashamed. I know you despise me!"

"I don't despise you," said Amy, "and neither does Howard. Don't drag up the past, Jane. I know you had a hard time. I realized it more afterward. It's only that Nancy's ours, and—I was startled—and alarmed for a minute, thinking you might want her. Of course you can see her. She's just ready for her supper and bed. Come along upstairs."

* * *

Jane arose gracefully and dropped the fur coat from her shoulders. As she followed Amy she noticed that the house was no better furnished than the first time she had seen it, it seemed to be all books. Howard did not go with them and she was sorry. She would have liked to have him witness her admirable behaviour. She wished he had been the one to give permission to see the child. She could have been so grateful to him. He stirred her. She could think only of him.

Amy opened a door. "This is the nursery," she said. "And this is Nancy." She hesitated, then added: "I must bring up her supper, Jane—you go ahead and speak to her. She won't be shy!"

She ran down to where Howard was standing uneasily in the living room. "I left them alone, Howard. I didn't want to hear Jane with her—at first, I mean. It's all right, don't you think? She means it, about not taking her? I won't give Nancy up, no matter what line she tries." She put her head against his shoulder to be reassured.

"She'd better mean it. And I'm sure she does, sweet. She doesn't want to start any scandal and she doesn't want to take on the care of a child, either."

"But Nancy's so darling, Howard; it makes me uneasy, I can't help it."

"Don't worry. She's not going to have Nancy. Not if I have to beat her over the head with the poker and throw her out on the pavement. Not now, or any time."

"I'm glad you're here." She hugged him hard. "Don't stir out of the house until she's gone, will you?"

"Not a step. If you need help, give a loud shriek."

Upstairs Jane was looking at her child with surprised disappointment. She had expected, from egotism rather than reason, that Nancy would be movingly beautiful, a small replica of herself at her best. She was not. To Jane's eyes she was not even pretty.

The little girl was sitting on the hearth rug, her cheeks flushed from the heat of the fire. She was already in her nightgown. Her bed, covers turned down, waited in the corner, and near her was the low table for her supper, with Amy's chair beside it. Solemn and wide-eyed, she returned Jane's gaze and because Jane was a stranger remarked politely, "Ha-yo," adding, after a second, "W'ere my muvver?"

"She's coming," said Jane, feeling perfectly idiotic. "You—you're Nancy, I suppose." She thought, "and why did they ever give her that name! I always detested it! Nancy! Such a silly-sounding name!" She advanced cautiously and sat down in Amy's chair, which roused Nancy's expectance. "Supper?" she asked, scrambling up.

* * *

She was tall for her age, but Jane did not know that. She seemed very small. Her hair was curly and light, her eyes dark blue. Jane couldn't see in her the slightest resemblance to herself, or to Roger Thorpe either, and while that last was desirable, she did feel that she had been somehow cheated. "Upon my word," she said aloud, "you look more like Amy than you do like me!"

Nancy settled down again since the stranger had offered no supper. She had another rag doll, a little more battered than the one downstairs, and she began to rock it and sing to it in a wordless humming which stopped as Amy came in with a tray.

"Oh Jane, was she singing?" said Amy, excitedly. "Do you know, as tiny as she is, she can carry a tune? The other day she hummed part of Rubenstein's 'Since First I Met Thee' I'd been playing for Mother!"

"Do you expect her to be a musician?" asked Jane.

"I certainly do." Amy put the cereal, the milk and toast and junket on the table and Nancy sat down in her chair and waited to have the napkin tied around her neck. Then she began to eat, her little hand holding the spoon properly.

"I have no talent for music at all, any kind of it," said Jane.

"Oh well, I believe in environment rather than heredity," said Amy. Jane would have liked to slap her. She was sure that Amy understood her flat disappointment and was enjoying it. Amy wasn't disturbed now that she might take the child.

"I'm going to give her music lessons as soon as she's a bit older," went on Amy, "a few minutes every day. She's not going to be

Tear bombs and gas guns played an effective part in routing the thousands of pickets and sympathisers who rioted in the San Francisco dock strike. The officers, wearing "tin hats" are shown in action during a melee in which two men were killed and more than 70 wounded.

Choked by tear gas and beaten with police clubs, rioters were hurled back, and trucks rushed through the picketed area to San Francisco piers, to load ship tied up for weeks by the longshoremen's strike. This photo was taken as rioters fled before the police attack, in which several were injured and many arrested.

TWO MEN SENT TO GAOL

Six months' hard labour each was the sentence imposed by Mr. Macfadyen, at the Central Magistracy this morning, on Lai Yee, unemployed, who admitted possession of 550 counterfeit ten-cent pieces at Des Voeux Road Central, and Tse Yiu, unemployed, who was convicted for aiding and abetting.

Detective Sergeant Hemsley said that about 6 a.m. on August 4 the first defendant was arrested in Des Voeux Road Central. He said he had come from Canton on board the steamer Tung On. Eleven rolls of counterfeit coins were found on him. He said he had been given the coins by a man in Canton the previous day to bring down to Hongkong. The man who gave him the coins said he would meet him at the Ko Shing tea house in Wanchai. He was paid 20 cents for bringing the coins down. Two Chinese detectives were accordingly sent to the tea house with defendant, and there the second man was arrested.

FATAL MOTOR MISHAP

CAR DRIVER FINED FIFTY DOLLARS

A sequel to the fatal accident on June 16 in Queen's Road Central, near the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank, in which a coolie, Tam Yuen, was killed after being knocked down by car No. 108, was the appearance before Mr. Hamilton, at the Central Magistracy this morning, of Lam Yu-ping, the driver of the car, on summonses for having the car with inefficient brakes, and, alternatively, with allowing the car to be on the road.

It will be recalled that the man died in hospital after being an inmate for nearly a month. A verdict of "Accidental Death" was returned at the subsequent Coroner's inquiry.

Mr. T. P. K. Kemble, appearing for the driver this morning, submitted that there was no doubt that the man's death was caused by the accident, but the medical evidence was that his death was really caused by the load he was carrying on his back. Mr. Kemble therefore submitted that the driver of the car was rather unlucky. On the point of the inefficiency of the brakes, Mr. Kemble submitted that Sergeant McInnis had stated that a certain portion of the brakes was disconnected. He submitted this was caused by the bump when the car passed over the man. It was incredible that defendant would have driven the car with the brakes in the condition mentioned.

Mr. Hamilton fined defendant $50 on the first count, and cautioned him on the second, remarking that if it were not for the fact that he was driving at only 15 miles an hour, he might have been held for manslaughter.

STAIRS NOT A PUBLIC PLACE

RULING IN KOWLOON DOG CASE

S. Komor, of No. 18 Hill Wood Road, was summoned before Mr. J.H.B. Lee at the Kowloon Magistracy this morning for allowing his dog to be in a public place without a muzzle or a lead on July 7 at 7 p.m.

Defendant denied the charge. He said the dog had a lead and was being taken out by an amah.

Inspector Shaftain said the facts of the case were rather unusual. It was true that the dog was being led by an amah from a chain. While coming down the steps of the flat, the dog bit somebody who was going up. The stairs could not be called a public place, because an unauthorised person found on them at night could be charged with loitering.

His Worship decided that the stairs were not a public place and dismissed the summons.

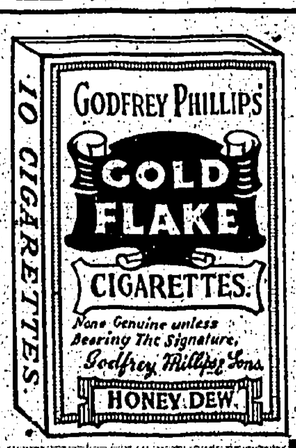

Mrs. F. La Fleur, of K.I.L. 63, Ngau Shi Wan, was fined $5 on each of three summonses for not having licences for her dogs. It was stated that defendant took out the licences immediately after the dogs had been found by Sergeant Pennell.

Mrs. J. J. Richard, of No. 44 Bute Street, was fined $6 for not having a licence for her dog on July 13.

SILVER-PLATING THE AMERICAN TREASURY

States, but again entirely at his discretion. Similarly, discretional authority is given the President to regulate or prohibit domestic sales, as well as export and import, of silver, and to sell, at home or abroad, Treasury stocks whenever they exceed the prescribed proportion to gold or whenever the market price of silver rises above $1.29 an ounce.

The act further provides that the price paid by the Treasury should at no time exceed $1.29 an ounce, and that stocks of silver situated in the United States on May 1 should not be purchased at a higher price than 50 cents an ounce. Moreover, a tax of 50 per cent is imposed on all profits accruing from silver transactions effected after May 15, 1934.

The Secretary of the Treasury is still directed to issue currency certificates against the silver acquired under the act. However, the face value of these issues does not have to be the equivalent of $1.29 for each ounce. The act merely prescribes that it should not be less than the cost of the metal purchased. This is another restriction upon the amount of inflation that the purchases of silver are likely to cause.

While much less comprehensive than the Dies-Thomas bill, the new measure nevertheless represents a substantial gain for the silverites in their march toward their one and only real objective —an artificial rise in the price of silver. The Dies-Thomas bill was framed in such a way as to make it almost certain that the price of silver would, sooner or later, be driven up to $1.29 an ounce, or about 200 per cent above the current market price. The silver purchase act may or may not achieve this precise result, but it is confidently expected to carry the price of silver substantially above the present level. To the extent that it does this, it will afford the silver producers a return in excess of what the market for that metal would normally yield them.

The advocates of silver have always clothed their special interest plea in a cloak of general welfare. Their principal arguments deserve a brief examination.

The acceptance of silver by the United States Government in exchange for agricultural exports has been urged on the ground that it would help the farmer by opening up new foreign markets for his products, especially in the Orient. But the proponents of this argument have never explained that by receiving silver at a premium, the United States Government would have embarked upon undisguised "dumping," one of the most unsavoury practices of unfair competition in international trade, which could not have failed to arouse bitter resentment and bring about sharp retaliation in other countries, thus curtailing, rather than promoting, international trade.

Purchases of silver by the Treasury have been further advocated for the purpose of increasing our monetary metallic base. It is difficult to imagine that anyone with a glimmer of understanding of our monetary organization can seriously believe that this country suffers from a shortage of basic monetary metal. Thanks to the devaluation of the dollar and the recent inflow of gold, we possess to-day a stock of gold representing almost twice as many dollars as in the balmy days of top-notch prosperity. Without adding one ounce of silver to our stocks of monetary metal, we now have a currency and credit foundation for a boom so frenzied that even the mad days of 1928-29 would appear mere child's play by comparison.

The most spurious, as well as the most naive, argument advanced in connection with silver purchases has been that, by means of such purchases and the consequent advancement of the price of the metal, the general domestic price index can be raised to the 1926 level and then maintained at that level by alternate turning on and off of the silver purchase tap. Those who still continue to urge this argument have clearly learned less than nothing from the dismal failure of the recent experiment in raising commodity prices by a manipulation of the price of gold. The whole idea is so fantastic that it ought to tax even the most undiscriminating credulity. Unfortunately, it is still reflected in the new bill, though greatly toned down and much reduced in scope.

* * *

The Dies-Thomas bill would have been a major disaster for the process of recovery. Its effect would have been to milk the country for the advantage of the silver producers and, at the same time, to give us an unworkable—and, consequently, economically destructive—monetary organization. The silver act is, by comparison, much less dangerous in this respect. Nevertheless, it still represents a triumph of special interests over general welfare, since it opens the way for an undue enrichment of a small group at public expense, although on a much lesser scale than that group would have wished.

This second aspect of the question is fundamentally far more important than the first. A subsidy to the silver producers is bad enough, but it is much less serious than a further unsettlement of business confidence resulting from a policy of continued monetary manipulation. So long as this policy is maintained, the chances for an international agreement on monetary stabilization—an indispensable condition of real economic recovery—remain as slight as ever. What happened at the London conference last summer showed clearly that there is not a single nation in the world prepared to follow our lead in embarking upon a permanent system of price control by currency management.

LABOUR AND WAR

At a moment when fears of another European conflagration are openly voiced, it is of interest to turn to the attitude of British Labour on the question of war. This has recently been clarified at a joint meeting of the T.U.C. General Council, the National Executive of the Labour Party, and the Executive Committee of the Parliamentary Labour Party. The fundamental idea for which British Labour stands is that peace must be conceived as a positive constructive enterprise in the building up of a co-operative world commonwealth, and it contends that the old negative, backward-looking competitive idea of maintaining balance of power as the final goal of the nation's foreign policy must be adjured once and for all. Coming down to realities, there is a distinction drawn between wars of an aggressive character and wars undertaken in defence of the collective peace system. It is recognised that the British Government might have to use its military and naval forces in support of the League, in restraining an aggressor nation which declined to submit to the League's authority, and which flagrantly used military measures in defiance of its pledged word. But the ultimate objective is the ridding of the world of all national armed forces, substituting therefor an international police force under the League's authority. The first step in this direction, the Labour Party suggests, should be the abolition of national Air Forces and the establishment of an international force of interceptor and scout planes under the League's orders, and the internationalisation of civil aviation. With regard to legislation, the Party has in mind a Peace Act which would place upon the Statute Book Britain's national interpretation of her obligations under the collective peace system, and which would bind the Government to submit disputes with other States to some form of pacific procedure. At the same time, emphasis is laid on the duty of supporting the Government unflinchingly in all the risks and consequences attendant upon its action in taking part in collective measures against a peace-breaker. On the question of a general strike in the event of war occurring, the Party has now somewhat modified its views, and is content to call a general Congress of the various labour organisations when there is threat of hostilities, for the purpose of considering the situation in all its ramifications. In the main, the Labour ideas will find fairly general acceptance by reason of the fact that they are based on a sound approach to the problem, but they would be of even greater merit were there some indication that other nations would fall in line therewith. They will, at any rate, serve as a worthy ideal, pointing to the day when the settlement of disputes by means of armed forces will have become a thing of the past.

NOTES OF THE DAY

PEACE AND SUSPICION

The maddest thing about the mad world of to-day is the combination of an almost universal desire for peace with intensive diplomatic activity—some would call it intrigue—that bears every appearance of being ultimately designed for another test of armed strength. That provides the error into which so many observers persistently fall. The strength of, say, France's interest in the preservation of peace is allowed to fill the entire picture for them; obscuring every other tendency, including the most important and dangerous, the refusal of those nations who proclaim their peaceful intentions to drop their suspicions of their neighbours. Even an almost unanimous wish for peace cannot in itself prevent war and certainly not when it is accompanied by a steady preparation for the worst.

STABILISING INFLUENCE

Search for a possible stabilising influence in Europe to-day is vain, though it does not follow that it will not appear. Economic recovery, for instance, if it could be produced as by the stroke of a magician's wand, would alter the whole complexion within a week. In the meantime, however, Europe is seen entering upon a new, decisive stage of forming alliances. That it is still too early to define the precise alignments which are emerging is admitted even by those engaged in conducting governmental policy. But trends and broad outlines of coming alliances can already be discerned. And in a world madly arming and re-arming the policy of grouping military powers into rival camps seems only too inviting. Germany, Italy, Austria and Hungary—the same Triple Alliance which persisted up to the moment of Austria's war declaration against the Serbs twenty years ago are again coming closer together. France, Russia, Czecho-Slovakia and Turkey are regarded as the nucleus of the opposing forces.

* * *

BOTH ENDS

Britain is viewed as "playing both ends from the middle" and as having reverted to her post-Napoleonic policy of striking a balance of power between France and Germany, enabling her at a given crucial moment to throw her weight in the scales on whichever side her interests may command. Without destroying this picture, it can be admitted that Austro-German relations at this time continue to be, to say the least, unfriendly and that Rome's fear of Germany's overt or covert annexation of Austria remains a wedge between Italians and Germans. The opinion prevails in Europe, however, that the centrifugal force of a rearmed Germany will draw Austria into its orbit, while Italy's anti-French bias causes Mussolini to lean towards Germany. As in 1914, however, Italy may not be reckoned as a certain ally for either side.

EMBRYONIC ALLIANCES

The tentacles of these embryonic alliance, according to one source, extend far into the Orient and it is suggested that Germany and Japan are approaching a definite understanding as to their common action in case of war on the Soviet Union. Germany would doubtless need three or more years to build up her army, air force and navy to the point at which her worth as a military ally acquires real value. The saving clause in these developments is likely to be the conclusion of a Pact of Mutual Assistance between Russia, France, Czechoslovakia and Germany (among others) if Germany decides to adhere. Here again, it would develop into a defensive alliance against Germany if Hitler declines to accept. The recent endorsement of the Eastern Locarno proposal by Sir John Simon does not remove the necessity for keeping a close watch upon the situation.

SILVER-PLATING THE AMERICAN TREASURY

By LEO PASVOLSKY

THE only good thing one can say about the new silver purchase act, introduced in Congress as an Administration bill on May 22 and signed by the President on June 19, is that it is less harmful than any of the numerous measures previously proposed by individual congressmen and senators. Apart from this, the measure has nothing whatever to recommend it. It is an economically bad and wholly unnecessary piece of legislation.

The repeated surrender of the two houses of Congress and of the President himself to a small, but clamorous and persistent, group of pro-silver congressmen and senators is one of those political mysteries that defy rational explanation. Not one of the numerous arguments in favour of "doing something for silver," advanced in and out of Congress, has ever borne even a semblance of reasonableness or soundness. These arguments have always constituted nothing more than verbal foliage around the real objective of the movement—the enrichment of silver producers and of speculators in that metal at the expense of the rest of the community. Yet the silverites have marched steadily on, from one victory to another.

Their first success was achieved in the summer of 1933, when a provision was written into the Thomas amendment, authorizing the Treasury to receive silver in payment of the war debt instalments falling due on June 15. Then came the international silver agreement in London, negotiated entirely on our initiative, in accordance with which the United States Government undertook to make purchases of silver roughly equivalent to our domestic production of that metal. This undertaking was carried into effect in December, when the President, by an executive order, directed the Treasury to purchase all domestically produced silver at 64.5 cents an ounce, or roughly at 50 per cent above the then prevailing market price.

Not satisfied with this substantial achievement, the congressional silver bloc began to press for further advantage. On March 19, the House passed the so-called Dies bill. When this measure reached the Senate, it was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, rewritten there into a formidable plan for action with respect to silver, and in its new form was favourably reported to the Senate by Senator Elmer Thomas as spokesman for the committee. It was at this juncture that the President stepped into the fray, and the Administration silver bill was hammered out by Treasury experts and the representatives of the silver bloc.

The Dies-Thomas bill provided for purchases of silver by the United States Treasury in practically unlimited quantities, and for the issuance against the metal thus acquired of silver certificates, again in wholly unpredictable amounts. Three methods were laid down for the acquisition of silver.

First, the Secretary of the Treasury and the recently created Export-Import Bank were to go into the business of marketing abroad American agricultural surpluses in exchange for silver bullion and coin, the metal to be accepted at a premium of not less than 10 and not more than 25 per cent above its current world price.

Second, the Secretary was to be directed to nationalize stocks of silver held in the United States at a price not less than the highest world price on the day preceding the issuance of the nationalization proclamation.

And third, he was to be directed to purchase, after Jan. 1, 1935, not less than 50,000,000 ounces of silver a month, in addition to the amounts acquired through the sale of agricultural products, at prices to be fixed by himself. In no case, however, was the purchase price of silver to exceed $1.29 an ounce.

Against each ounce of silver, in whatever manner acquired, the Secretary of the Treasury was to be directed to issue $1.29 silver certificates, a part of which was to be used in payment for the metal purchased, while the remainder was to be retained by the Treasury as its profit and put into circulation by way of government expenditure. For some utterly unaccountable reason, not only silver certificates, but also all other forms of currency in the United States were to be made redeemable in silver coin.

The only limitation on the purchases of silver and, consequently, on the amount of inflation that they could occasion, was that the purchases were to continue only until the price of silver would rise to $1.29 an ounce, or until "the general domestic price level, as measured by the index of the Bureau of Labour Statistics shall equal the price level of 1926." Thereafter they were to cease and be resumed only when either the price level or the price of silver would fall by as much as 3 per cent. Since no one could possibly foretell how much silver might have to be purchased in order to achieve either of these two objectives, the limitation would have been clearly of a most indefinite nature.

The new act jettisons most of the important features of the Dies-Thomas measure. The provision for marketing agricultural surpluses has disappeared altogether. So have the mandatory prescriptions with regard to specified monthly purchases of silver. So has also the absurd provision for the redemption of all American currency in silver dollars.

The silver purchase act does provide for purchases of silver by the Treasury, but in a more flexible manner and with a different sort of limitation. The only important mandatory feature is the declaration of policy that "the proportion of silver to gold in the monetary stocks of the United States should be increased with the ultimate objective of having and maintaining one-fourth of such monetary stocks in silver." Thus the amount of silver that the Treasury is obligated to purchase and hold is limited by the size of its gold holdings.

The word "ultimate," used in connection with the objective of the act, is of very great importance, particularly when taken in conjunction with the provision that the time in which, and the rate at which, that objective shall be attained are left to the discretion of the Executive. The act also empowers the President to nationalize all privately owned stocks of silver held in the United

CHAPTER II

NOW the people of Kong delighted in feats of skill, and excelled one against the other; and they practiced their games in divers places.

2. For many strove to hit a ball, even a small white ball, thousands of cubits. They hit them in the country-side, and continually prayed fervently that the light of day might extend until the round be finished.

3. For oft the way thereof it was rough, and evil spirits abounded, even as a bogey; and they exorcised the spirits, yea they put the spirits down, with many prayers and objugations. Yea verily their tongue it was strong with mighty sayings. For how else might they prevail?

4. And others served in the Courts with vigour, they were judges of fine points. And there was often talk of service and love, but little of charity. For one strove for advantage over against the other continually; one was set against the other.

5. Peradventure they favoured another game, named after a chirping insect, tho' none can tell the reason thereof. And the players prayed continually to their god, even to the god Owzat.

6. And they made a mystery of their craft, for one would seek to throw a ball over against another, and he that presideth would call him Noble. Yet again they would cross over, one against the other, and inscribe on the records a maiden, tho' no woman be within their bounds.

7. And there were other mysteries to guard the craft and also there was great controversy. For one would guard his cattle and stand squarely in front thereof.

8. And another would attack the castle, even the wicket-gate and perchance strike him who defended it. And there was great tumult; and ill-fame covered the craft.

CHAPTER 12.

Now the residue of the people delighted also in skill in games, especially skill in others. For it pleased them to show their skill as it were by proxy.

2. And there were many games that they favoured, and paid many shekels that they might direct; for those that clamoured to the gods and made the mightiest noise, behold that side would win.

3. There was an especial game, wherein all were leagued together; and the bystanders would call loudly upon the fowls of the air. They would curse with a terrible curse he who bore the scales, if it were they did not descend as they required of him, for such was their goal.

4. Many of the tribes, even the elders, pit the skill of horses one against the other, and wagered mightily on the result thereof, yea many shekels were gained and lost.

5. And they that oversaw these races made profit from the wagers, for it was the custom that they received a tithe; and the Elders moreover set round about taxgatherers.

6. And the taxgatherers collected from all who wagered another tithe for the Elders, so these had great possessions thereby.

7. And it came to pass that there were seven lean years, even as had been foretold, and the people cast from them their evil habits and wagered not.

8. And the overseers of the races bewailed and cried Behold, our revenue decreaseth; they cried with a loud voice.

9. And the Elders hearkened unto them and said, We will remit our taxes even the half thereof, that ye be not oppressed. Go ye in peace.

10. And he who sits at the receipt of custom reported saying, Behold the money in your coffers diminisheth; and they replied, Care ye not. Cannot we tax the residue of the people for are they not as a flock of sheep?

Secret Gun Trials

DEADLY AGAINST AIRCRAFT

(Special to "Telegraph")

(By Telegraph. Copyright. Telegraphic Messages Ordinance, 1911. Received August 7, 9.33 a.m.)

Washington, Aug. 6.

It is learned that the United States Army is engaged in secret experiments with a new type anti-aircraft stratosphere gun.

Ballistic experts hope to attain a vertical range of ten miles.

The gun is equipped with special electrical altitude finders, range finders and speed and direction indicators, virtually assuring ability to bring down enemy aircraft.

RING OF STEEL.

The weapon will be part of a general anti-aircraft defence plan that the War Department is working out in connection with an attempt to put a ring of steel round the country.

Mr. George H. Dern, Secretary of the War Department, is making an effort to obtain an allotment of $33,000,000 from the Public Works Administration in order that the plan may be started as early as possible.—United Press.

SEQUEL TO LOCAL FEUD

NINE MEN BOUND OVER

All the nine men who were remanded in connection with the unlawful assembly at the Tak Ming tea house on Friday last, pleaded guilty when they made their appearance before Mr. Hamilton, at the Central Magistracy this morning. They were bound over in personal bonds of $100 each to keep the peace for six months.

Leung Hon and Lau Wang, sandalwood makers, were charged with knowledge of an unlawful assembly; Chan So, rattan maker, and Chan Yun-chan, broom maker, with possession of eleven hammers and a file for an unlawful purpose; and Mok Wai and Li Yung, sandalwood makers, Chan Wing, rattan maker, and Chan Chan and Wong Hung, lorry drivers, with unlawful assembly.

Detective Sergeant Fitches said the trouble originated several nights before the defendants were arrested. Lau Wang was assaulted by a lorry driver, and he went to the President of the Chung Shing Guild and made a complaint. The President decided to call on the members of the Lorry Drivers' Guild to get compensation, and a meeting was arranged at the Tak Ming tea house. The President also asked Lau Wang to bring with him some weapons, in case the lorry drivers came in force.

Accordingly, Lau Wang got the hammers and the file from Tai-yuan Street. Chan So and Chan Yun-chun were given charge of the weapons, and were placed on the floor. A district watchman saw them there, and arrested them. They then took the watchman to Lau Wang and Leung Hon, who were the cause of the trouble, and they in turn took the watchman to the meeting place. The fight had not started then.

Sergeant Fitches asked that all defendants be bound over in substantial bonds.

Mr. Hamilton stated that if there was any more trouble he would give accused six months each. They were all nearly as bad as each other.

INDECENT PICTURE HAWKER

SMART SENTENCE IMPOSED

Yeung Kam-tin, unemployed, was fined $150, or two months' hard labour, by Mr. Hamilton, at the Central Magistracy this morning for having distributed indecent pictures to the public in the passageway of No. 17 Queen's Road Central, yesterday.

Defendant admitted the offences, saying that he was selling the pictures to obtain money to pay his fare to Canton.

Inspector Dredge said defendant tried to sell the pictures to Sergeant Mooney.

Mr. Hamilton ordered the destruction of the pictures.

IMPRESSIVE LAST RITES FOR PRES. HINDENBURG

HONGKONG SERVICE

H.E. THE GOVERNOR PRESENT

REV. DIEHL'S ADDRESS

In common with German communities all over the world, exiles of the Fatherland in Hongkong and prominent members of the local British community paid homage to the memory of the late President von Hindenburg at a memorial service held in the Union Church, Kennedy Road, this morning.

The service was conducted in German by the Rev. Frederich Diehl, of the Rhenish Mission and a translation of address, a glowing tribute to the late President, was read by the Rev. E. G. Powell.

The Church was filled to capacity, those attending being received at the Church doors by Mr. H. Gipperich, Consul-General for Germany.

Amongst those attending included H. E. the Governor, Sir William Peel, accompanied by Lady Peel and Mr. Richard Peel and Capt. R. F. Walter, R.A., A.D.C., H. E. the G.O.C., Major General O. C. Borrett and Mrs. Borrett, accompanied by his A.D.C., Commodore Frank Elliott and Mrs. Elliott, accompanied by Paymr. Cmdr. F. R. Porter, Rev. H. W. Baines, representing Bishop Hall, members of the Consular Body, Hon. Sir Thomas Southorn (Colonial Secretary) and Lady Southorn, Hon. Mr. R. E. Lindsell and Mrs. Lindsell, Hon. Mr. N. L. Smith (Secretary for Chinese Affairs), Hon. Mr. E. D. C. Wolfe (Inspector General of Police), Hon. Dr. A. R. Wellington (Director of Medical and Sanitary Services), Hon. Mr. R. M. Henderson (Director of Public Works), Hon. Sir Shouson Chow, Hon. Sir William Shenton, Hon. Mr. R. H. Kotewall, Hon. Mr. S. W. Ts'o and Mrs. Ts'o, Hon. Mr. T. N. Chau, Hon. Mr. J. Owen Hughes, Lieut-Col. H. L. Murrow, Mr. F. P. Franklin, Mr. F. Kuelps, secretary of the local Nazi Party, and practically the whole of the local German Community.

GLOWING TRIBUTE.

The Rev. Diehl, in the course of his address said:—Dear Friends and Children of the Fatherland,—Throughout Germany to-day the muffled Church bells are tolling, the bustle and noise of all the work and business have ceased whilst our nation pays its reverent homage on the burial of our great State-President Von Hindenburg. Deep mourning fills the heart of our people because of the death of this great man whom God in his mercy and grace gave to our country, to serve at a time of especially dire need and distressing conditions. President von Hindenburg died at his family estate in Neudick on Friday, August 2, between the hours of 9 and 10 forenoon. He passed in quiet sleep from time to eternity.

The mention of Hindenburg's name acted like magic upon our people, who instantly responded to him. To-day we picture a vast concourse of people in funeral procession wending their way through East Prussia, to Tannenberg, where Field Marshal von Hindenburg won by God's grace the splendid victory over the mighty Russian forces, and there his body will be laid to rest. We follow those last rites with vivid imagination and tense emotion.

GREAT SAVIOUR.

How can we ever forget what the late President von Hindenburg has done for our Fatherland? The grave can never close upon the fact of our national indebtedness to the great saviour of our country; indeed, the grave can never bury Hindenburg—he will continue to live in the life of his people. We cannot rightly estimate the true worth of the late President von Hindenburg to our people. He is and ever will be an outstanding example for us in his humility, in his inflexible loyalty to duty, in his sincerity of purpose, and in his untiring determination to lead our people and Fatherland out of the horrors of the Great War and the deplorable conditions which immediately followed. His unwavering faith in God and his absolute trust in the Lord's ways and guidance cannot fail to impress and influence us. In ripe old age, nearly 87 years old, the Lord granted him a peaceful passing, and we are indeed thankful that our late beloved President was spared long and painful suffering.

ILLUSTRIOUS HERO.

The achievements of Field Marshal President von Hindenburg will be recorded in the history of our Fatherland, thus the generation to come will learn something of the work and service of our illustrious hero. History will doubtless place him among the greatest men of the century. We to-day in the depths of our hearts, promise, with God's help, to follow the example of President von Hindenburg in our service of the Fatherland. We commit him with sorrowful and grateful hearts to the God who gave him to us, and say "Blessed are the dead, which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, said the spirit, for they may rest from their labours; and their works do follow them."

The service was brought to a close with the choral rendering "ach hat einen Kameraden" ("I Had a Comrade").

ROTARY REFERENCE.

Speaking at this afternoon's meeting of the Rotary Club at the Hongkong Hotel the Chairman, Rotarian M. K. Lo, in asking members to stand in memory of the late President said "In his death Germany has lost a trusted and loved president and the world has lost one of its great statesmen and also an incalculable influence for good and a very fine steady force. As Rotarian Powell ably put it to me this morning when he telephoned to me one of the objects of Rotary, namely service above self was most strikingly exemplified by the life and death of the President."

SMASH ON KIAOCHOW RAILWAY

Locomotives Completely Wrecked

Tsingtao, Aug. 6.

A Tsingtao-bound passenger train on the Tsinan-Tsingtao Railway crashed into a standing freight train at the Ta-Erh-Pao Station late last night, the impact completely wrecking the two locomotives.

Fortunately, only a few casualties occurred although the damage is estimated at over $150,000.

The accident is attributed to the negligence of pointsmen.—Central News.

FAMILY OF ELEVEN TAKE POISON

FAMINE TRAGEDY IN CHEKIANG

Hangchow, Aug. 7.

Wretched conditions prevailing in Chekiang Province as a result of the persistence of the drought. Crop failures have occurred everywhere and famine has already been created in districts which are less accessible to relief agencies.

Many people have committed suicide rather than face slow starvation. In one instance, in the Pohsien District, a whole family of eleven took poison. A twelve-year old child, who did not take a fatal dose, was the sole survivor.—Central News.

Chick Wong, 37, a gardener at Kowloon Tong, was admitted to the Kowloon Hospital yesterday after having swallowed an opium solution, with the alleged intention of committing suicide.

CORTEGE JOURNEYS THROUGH NIGHT

TORCHLIT SCENE AT NEUDECK

BRIEF HALT AT FROEDENAU

Berlin, Aug. 6.

Most impressive scenes were witnessed as the remains of President von Hindenburg were borne from Neudeck to Tannenberg, where the interment is taking place.

In the glare of torches held aloft, the coffin was carried out of Neudeck Castle by four officers of the East Prussian Regiment, and behind the coffin, statue-like, was Hindenburg's son and wife, together with the late Field Marshal's two daughters and their husbands.

The coffin was then placed on a catafalque, and a mixed choir from the village church rendered "Power of Love." The Vicar then spoke a few words.

TORCH PROCESSION.

This brief service concluded, the coffin was placed on a gun-carriage and the funeral cortege was formed, all the troops present following in slow march through the lines, bearing torches as far as Deutscheylau, where the coffin was transferred to a motor hearse.

Accompanied by a motor detachment of troops and police, the cortege continued for fifty miles to Tannenberg, where it is arriving at four o'clock in the morning.

The cortege halted briefly at Froedennu, where, during the Great War, Hindenburg and his staff directed the Battle of Tannenberg.—Reuter.

HONGKONG SERVICE.

A special memorial service to the late President von Hindenburg was held at the Union Church, Hongkong, this morning, being attended by practically every member of the German community, members of the Consular Body, His Excellency the Governor and Lady Peel and their son, H. E. Major General and Mrs. Borrett, Commodore and Mrs. Elliott, and many others.

The service, which was most impressive, was conducted by the Rev. F. Diehl, of the Rhenish Mission, who, speaking in German, delivered a striking tribute to the late President. The Rev. E. G. Powell later read an English translation of the address.

A fuller report will appear in our final edition.

Lee at the Kowloon Magistracy this morning after being convicted on a charge of stealing a basket of clothing, to the total value of $30. He was seen by a Chinese detective with a basket, at a bus station, and could not give a satisfactory account of how he came to have the clothing. He later admitted having stolen it.

As a result of the Bridge and Mah-Jong Drive, held by St. John's Cathedral Women's Guild in the Cathedral Hall on July 31, the sum of $273 has been given to the Benevolent Society.

NO TENNIS INTERPORT

HONGKONG UNABLE TO RAISE A MEN'S TEAM

AGAINST SHANGHAI

There will be no tennis interport between Hongkong and Shanghai this year. The Hongkong L.T.A. have found it impossible to accept an invitation to visit the northern port next month owing to the difficulties of team raising.

At one time prospects of sending a strong men's and ladies' team to Shanghai were very bright, but subsequently, H. D. Rumjahn and Ho Kau-lau expressed inability to get away owing to business calls. Other leading players found themselves in a similar position.

Up to this wek, however, it was hoped that a ladies' team night make the trip, and Shanghai were asked if they would care to stage a ladies' Interport.

PHILIPPINES VERY KEEN.

A reply has been received in which the Shanghai L.T.A., regret their inability to do this, so that the Shanghai-Hongkong Interport is once again shelved, at least for a few months.

In the meantime, the Philippines have expressed anxiety to be included in these tennis Interports, and a request from the Philippine Lawn Tennis Association for such a consideration, has been favourably received by the local Association.

It is more than likely that the Philippines will send a team to Hongkong next year. The Manila Bulletin states that an invitation has been received from Shanghai, and that the Philippines intend to despatch a team to the north this autumn.

CANADIAN SWIMMING SUCCESSES IN BRITISH EMPIRE GAMES

ENGLAND AND SOUTH AFRICA DO WELL ON THE TRACK

AUSTRALIAN ESTABLISHES NEW BRITISH RECORD

Hart of South Africa won the shot putt with a haul of 48 feet 1¾ inches.

In the pole vault, Apps and Gilbert both of Canada tied with a leap of 12 feet 6 inches, and Apps won the jump-off.

South Africa scored again in the high jump, Thacker clearing the bar at 6 feet 3 inches to win.

England carried off the women's 440 yards relay, winning the event in 44 4-10 seconds.

British Guiana scored a merited success in the half mile final, which Edwards won in 1 minute 54 1-5 seconds, but the six miles race went to Penny of England, who had the excellent time of 31 minutes 3-5 seconds.

England recorded two achievements in the women's track events. Miss Hiscock of England won the 100 yards sprint in 11 3-10 seconds, and Miss Gladys Slunn, the English runner, captured the half mile in 2 minutes 19 4-10 seconds.

CANADA'S SWIMMING SUCCESSES.

Another big achievement for Canada was Miss Moss's diving victory, with 67.27 points.—Reuter.

Willard's Tennis Status

AUSTRALIAN STILL AMATEUR

At a meeting of the council of the New South Wales Lawn Tennis Association the position of A. Willard, the well-known player, was brought forward for discussion. It was stated that Willard's name appeared with that of the professional, J. O. Anderson, in an advertisement announcing that they would appear in matches to which an admission fee would be charged. A letter was received from Willard disclaiming any knowledge of the tournament.

A further letter from Willard's employees, Messrs. Best and Geo, informed the association that Willard was employed by them solely as a traveller. J. O. Anderson was engaged by them in his capacity as a professional tennis coach. Furthermore, they stated that Willard had on occasions hit a ball across a net to Anderson in a demonstration, but since it came to their notice that Willard's amateur status was endangered, the practice had ceased, as they had no desire to jeopardise his standing with the association.

The council decided to inform Messrs. Best and Geo that as long as Willard was not engaged in a demonstrative capacity with Anderson before pupils, his status would remain unaltered.

A TRAGEDY OF TENNIS SHORTS

[Lines recited at the prize-giving in the West of Scotland Tennis Championships, in which shorts were worn by lady competitors for the first time in the 49 years' history of the tournament.]

While people of an older age
Indulged in frowns and snorts,
The maiden took the tennis stage
Demure in silken shorts;
With airy grace her twinkling feet
So swiftly trod the ground,
That base-line drives and net-shots neat
Soon won the op'ning round
Next day she made spectators stare,
Who round the courts were seated,
For O! she wore another pair,
Most exquisitely pleated;
Her male opponent gazed aghast,
And as the maid had reckoned,
He feebly let her strokes go past,
So she won round the second.
Next day that naughty damsel dared
To play in shorts still shorter:
They were so cutely yoked and flared
Youths quarrelled to escort her;
She whirled about the courts so quick,
That after standing nine-all,
Her placing was so very slick
She won the semi-final.
Alas! that maiden bold next day,
Was placed in sorry quand'ry:
Each pair of shorts had gone astray
In somebody's steam laundry;
Although she 'phoned and wept and swore,
None could, alack! be found,
And, back in stodgy skirt once more,
She lost the final round.

Hongkong's rink, comprising Ramsay, J. F. McGowan, G. H. Sherriff and Hughie Nish (skip), suffered two reverses. In the first match they lost rather heavily to the Canadian rink by 19-10, but later they gave a fine account of themselves against New Zealand, losing only by 18-16.

T. F. Stainton, of the Taikoo Docks, caused a surprise in the Singles Championship, by defeating J. C. Brown, of the Kowloon Docks, by 21 shots to 11 on the 21st. head at the Club de Recreio.

RINKS CHAMPIONSHIP.

GLAMORGAN SKITTLED OUT

O'REILLY WORKS HAVOC

AND WINS TALENT MONEY

London, Aug. 6.

The Australians look as though they are going to carry off most of the talent money offered by the Swansea tradesman in connection with their encounter with Glamorgan.

A big holiday crowd to-day saw the Australians at their best in the field, and Glamorgan narrowly escaped an outright defeat on the second day's play.

Declaring at their overnight score of 400 for 7, the Australians quickly played havoc with the county batsmen.

O'Reilly was in great form, and almost unplayable. Glamorgan were rapidly sent back for the meagre total of 112, O'Reilly capturing 7 for 37.

Following on, the Welshmen gave a somewhat better account of themselves, and at the close had scored 189 for 5, being still 139 behind with five wickets in hand.

Smart is almost certain to win the offer of £5 for the highest score made by a Glamorgan player. To-day he rattled up 75 before dismissal.—Reuter.

Two More Records Shattered

Oslo, Aug. 6.

More world's athletic records dropped to-day in the International meeting at Oslo.

The Americans, who are sweeping all before them, were in magnificent form.

Eastman, brilliant track runner, lowered the world's figures for 500 metres, when he romped home in 1 minute 2 seconds.

Percy Beard, the American runner, also set new record figures for the 100 metre hurdles, doing the race in 14 2-10 seconds.—Reuter.

IS IT WORTH IT? ASKS MISS DOROTHY ROUND

CHAMPIONSHIP TENNIS DRAWBACKS

MEANS CONTINUAL NEGLECT

Dorothy round, at twenty-four, became woman tennis champion of the world. She knows what it has cost her to become champion. She knows what it is worth to her, and she sees more realistically than most girls at Wimbledon just what being a champion means.

She talked to me very frankly about it, writes a Sunday Express correspondent.

"What does being a tennis champion mean?" She said.

"It means that I am away from home for about fours months of the year. I often feel homesick.

"It means inevitably that I cannot keep in touch with my old friends.

"I have been at home two weeks in the last two months. In those weeks I did nothing but answer letters.

"I still have my sense of values.

"What are 'tennis friends' worth? This: when you are up you have plenty of friends. When you begin to decline again, as every player must sooner or later, they don't want to know you.

"Being a champion tennis player means that I have nothing to do all the winter.

"It means that although I am homesick when I am away all the travel unsettles me, so that I can't really settle down again at home.

"It means that, travelling about to tournaments and being away from home, I have really had rather a lonely time. At times!

"I am twenty-four.

"I was nineteen when I really determined to go on until I was champion. I always vowed I would throw my rackets in the sea then. But now I can't very well stop.

COST HUNDREDS.

"It has cost my father hundreds of pounds, I suppose, in seven years. That money has gone in hotels, travelling expenses, and equipment. He gave it willingly, because the whole family encouraged me to go ahead. I am delighted for them, and they are delighted for me.

"What shall I do in the future? I honestly do not know.

"I might have been doing my job as a gym mistress in a school, but that is gone now.

"Do you know that some of the girls who star at Wimbledon learn shorthand and typewriting in the winter so that they can get secretarial jobs?

"But when the summer comes they forget it all, and the next winter they have to begin all over again.

"That is how it is.

"What, for instance, shall I do this winter? It is the problem most girls at Wimbledon face.

SOON FORGOTTEN.

"I am touring Australian from October to March. After that I, in my particular instance, would like to work in a shop—a really nice shop.

"But I always meant to be a gym mistress.

"My father has spent the money that would have sufficed to train me as a gym mistress many times over.

"There cannot be much return for it. I may write some articles and perhaps a book.

"I do not know if I ever will.

"After all of it a tennis star is forgotten by the public in a year or two.

"I wonder sometimes, when I think of what I have done, what I shall do—is it worth it?"

FATE INTERVIEWED.

Dorothy Round might to-day still be unknown to fame if fate had not intervened.

When she was on holiday at the age of sixteen with her family in North Wales, at Pwllelli, her brother entered her for the local tournament there. She was badly beaten.

She would never have entered another tournament of her own accord, but her brother determined that she should go in for the junior tournament at Malvern. She went and she won it.

After that she began in earnest. She got into trouble at school for staying away a week at a time to play at tournaments, and only just scraped through her examinations.

The time came when Dorothy Round first came to Wimbledon. She felt a strange sensation on the court that all the spectators were looking at her feet and that she would trip up.

She did not get very far in that first year.

Now, six Wimbledons later, she has beaten them all.

USEFUL ADVICE

Collins On Doubles Play In Tennis

I. G. Collins paired up with F. H. D. Wilde for Wimbledon this year. With the recollection of the fine play Collins has reproduced at Wimbledon in the past with Dr. Gregory—few will forget their great fight in a five set final against Allison and Van Ryn in 1929—English enthusiasts welcomed the news that Collins was to compete again at Wimbledon after a year's absence.

His new partnership with Wilde possesses great possibilities. The young Middlesex player, so his various doubles partners say, is a natural doubles player with an instinct to play the right shot and be in the right position.

SUCCESSFUL PARTNERSHIP.

A successful partnership, says Collins, can only be built up by a pair who can thoroughly understand each other, and work together both on and off the court. "It is in the crisis that the real pair can just pull that little extra out. Many players can play good doubles when things are going well, but it is when one player is off form, or when the opposition produce whirlwind tennis, that the necessary qualities of the real pair are brought out. The difficult time has to be overcome until suddenly (it is hard to say why) the psychological moment does nearly always come when it is possible to fight back, and if the opportunity is seized, a match may often be pulled out of the fire.

"It is worth mentioning here how rarely brothers or husbands and wives have ever been able, over more than a short period, to form a successful partnership; probably they are each too keen for the other's sake to succeed; they are playing too much on their nerves, concentrating more for their partner than for themselves, to the detriment eventually of their own game. I have tried to emphasise that in doubles it is the temperament of the pair that is of more importance than their own actual playing ability."

Von Cramm's Meteoric Rise To Fame

Baron Gottfried von Cramm, the 1934 champion of France, is the son of Reichfreihord von Cramm who owns estates near Hanover.

Von Cramm first came into prominence at 18 years of age when he won the German junior championship at Frankfort in 1928. Three years later he began to make his mark in Continental play, and in 1932 assisted Germany in winning a place in the Interzone final of the Davis Cup with D. Prenn when he beat F. X. Shields and gave H. E. Vines a a hard match. The same year he won the German championship, beating R. Menzel in the final and also repeated this victory in last year's German championship final. He is, of course, the present holder of the Wimbledon mixed doubles championship with Mme. Sperling.

Von Cramm will shortly enter the German Diplomatic Corps.

CYCLING THRILLS

Club Enjoy Another Successful Outing

There was a slightly lower attendance on the Sunday run of the Hongkong Cycling Club, under Mr. E. Munns, vice-Captain, which was scheduled to reach Castle Peak for refreshments and bathing shortly after noon. Several members having made arrangements to ride out direct to the rendezvous after tiffin, the morning party decided to reach the Cafeteria later than the time originally set, and therefore the leader made for Taipo and Fanling at a brisk pace. At the latter place a puncture provided excuse for refreshments, and gave time for a more leisurely inspection of the light and shade effects produced by a few small clouds on the local hills. A suggestion was made on resuming the run that the border road should be traversed and accordingly the party wended their way through Sheungshui to that less frequented route. The subsequent scramble along the side of the Canton-Kowloon Railway and the carriage of the machines over a bridge by the method of stepping from sleeper to sleeper with nothing else between cyclist and water provided many thrills and much merriment. The return to the Circuit was made at Dill's Corner (near Santin) and the remaining few miles to the Cafeteria was made at a steady pace. A time schedule of the spin showed the riders to have made Taipo in 1¼ hours, with Fanling half-an-hour later (inclusive of repair of puncture); the Cafeteria was reached after the border detour at 2 p.m. after four hours' riding.

The afternoon section did not put in an appearance until after 4.30 p.m., and after refreshments had been enjoyed the whole Club adjourned to the beach to indulge in swimming and sun-bathing. Another cup of tea was enjoyed on returning to the Cafeteria and the wheelmen then resumed the homeward trip at 5.40 p.m. A strong pace was established by the leader which brought the party without further mishaps or halts to Shamshuipo at 6.50 p.m.

The Hon. Secretary, Mr. H. G. Crayford, is proceeding on a health cruise, and during his absence the duties of Secretary will devolve on Mr. H. A. G. Keates, R.A.S.C., Wellington Barracks.

It should also be noted that the Club Headquarters are now situated in 23, Taipo Road, Shamshuipo, where a room has been made available for members by the Captain, Mr. C. Read, who has removed from No. 7 Fuk Wing Street.

"STAY OUT OF MY LIFE!"

forced. But she's such a healthy, normal child—"

"She's not very good looking," broke in Jane, doubtfully.

"Oh she's no art calendar cherub, but she's perfectly shaped and her hair's got a natural curl! Her teeth have come through evenly so far and did you notice her hands and feet, and her lashes?"

Jane did not answer. She leaned back and looked around the room. It was very plain-looking, almost poor. But there was something here and in the whole house—Amy had it, too, Amy in her shabby dress — something balanced and warm and restful and well ordered. She couldn't define it. It was like that Vermeer painting she had seen in one of the exhibitions and lingered before, trying to analyze its charm. This undefined something—it reduced her own importance, made her an outsider and of no account. It was all of a piece with the child not looking like her.

* * *

Her gaze came back to the child. Nancy had finished her supper and her head was drooping. "She's ready for bed," said Amy. Then, with an effort, "Jane—wouldn't you like to kiss her goodnight?"

"Well—yes" She didn't especially want to, and the kiss was rather awkward, but Jane was surprised by the fragile softness of the cheek and the delicious fresh orris and violet flower smell of it. "Why, isn't she sweet!" she exclaimed.

"She is sweet," said Amy. "And she's the most loving and gentle baby!" She tucked Nancy in, opened the window ventilator, pushed the screen tight before the fire. "But she's got a temper, too. And she chatters like a monkey now that she's learning to talk. She was quite to-night because she was so sleepy."

Back in the living-room again with Howard, Jane pulled herself together, but she felt constrained and did not know how to begin what she wanted to say, but she certainly wasn't going to leave without making Howard really look at her and think of her. "You've been wonderful to her," she began tentatively, "I wish—I wish you'd let me do something for her, give her something, too."

"It would be better all around if you didn't do that," said Howard. "We'd rather not."

Ah, now he must at least argue with her. "But why? And we might as well look at the practical side of things. As she grows older there'll be a good bit of expense, schools and college and so on. Why shouldn't I establish a—a fund—to—to help with all that? I'd—I'd love to—"

"No," said Amy. "We'll manage to give Nancy sufficient education, and anyway that's a long time ahead."

Jane still spoke to Howard: "You don't want her to have anything from me? That isn't kind, that isn't fair. You don't need to let her know where it comes from. I want to do this for my own peace of mind, it'll make me feel a little better about her. You're cruel."

Buoyant Health.

Out in the sunshine for hours on end, day after day, happy care-free days, that is the time when you know the real joy of perfect health.

But holidays for most people come round so seldom, and the daily routine of life often entails such long tiring hours that it is no easy matter to maintain one's health.

The secret of good health lies in the condition of the blood stream, and it is due to their unique ability to create new, rich, red blood that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have proved so effective in the treatment of all manner of ills which have their origin in a poor condition of the blood.

When you are run-down for any reason do not neglect the early symptoms such as headaches, pains in the back and limbs, or if you tire too easily. These are all signs that your blood is becoming impoverished and your immediate need is a course of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, the blood creating, nerve-strengthening tonic which has proved of benefit to men and women for a period of more than fifty years.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are the prescription of a physician, an M.D. of Edinburgh University, and their health-giving merits have recently been put to tests in the light of modern scientific knowledge.

As a result it has been proved that these pills are definitely able to increase the haemoglobin content of the blood, haemoglobin being the substance which conveys oxygen from the lungs and nutriment from the food digested in the intestines to every cell and tissue of the body. Equally good for both men and women, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills may also be given to children with perfect safety, and they are especially helpful as a builder after illnesses. From chemists everywhere.

THE ROOSEVELT PROGRAMME

WHAT WASHINGTON EXPECTS

Washington, Aug. 6.

Observers here predict that the President's programme scheduled for the next Congress will not be conservative and involves the centralisation of the nation's banking and credit system, also a drastic revision of the tax system and comprehensive social legislation.

It is expected that any further sharp decline in business is likely to be revived by Government spending. Many expert observers believe that a business boom is likely to develop, especially if the N.R.A. is abandoned.

It is felt that the European gold bloc cannot hold out much longer. Food costs there will be high, with consequent pressure on exchanges. The flight of money to the United States would be pronounced but for exchange restrictions. Only intervention by the Stabilisation Fund can prevent the dollar from hardening. A further change in the gold content of the U.S. dollar is unlikely in the near future. If any new inflation gesture is required it will probably take the form of heavier silver buying abroad.

The Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace, states that the two million bale cotton pool will be so liquidated as not to disturb either the "spot" or "future" markets.—Swan, Culbertson and Fritz.

CONTRACT BRIDGE

By W. E. McKenney

Solution to Previous Contract Problem

Are you a groove player? In other words, do you play your cards mechanically? If so, you are not going to win at contract any more than a pitcher in a baseball game is going to win if he puts the ball in the groove to a home-run hitter.

Usually your opportunity for a good defensive play comes early in the hand, and therefore you have to do a lot of careful thinking. It is not always hard to plan your play when there are only three or four tricks remaining, so it requires more care early in the hand to put up a good defence.

Duplicate—N. and S. vul.
Opening lead—♥ J.

| South | West | North | East |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 ♣ | Pass | 1 ♠ | Pass |
| 2 ♣ | Pass | 2 ♠ | Pass |
| 2 N. T. | Pass | 3 ♠ | Pass |
| 4 ♠ | Pass | Pass | Pass |

South's bidding is of the constructive type. When North continues to re-bid spades, he, of course, is desirous of signing the hand off, but he is also giving South valuable information with each bid.

The first spade bid might show only four spades, but each re-bid shows one more spade. So when North goes to three spades, he informs his partner that he holds either six spades or an exceptionally strong five-card spade suit.

The Play

East's opening lead is the jack of hearts. South plays the king, West wins the trick with the ace. West then cashes the queen of hearts and now, if he will continue the third heart, even though declarer is going to be able to ruff in dummy, the contract will be defeated, because West then will be sure of making his king of spades and ace of clubs.

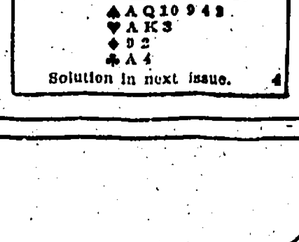

However, when the hand was played, West made the mistake of returning the jack of diamonds, which South won with the ace. South returned the king of clubs, and West won the trick with the ace.

Here again he missed an opportunity to defeat the hand. If he had held off the first club, won the second club trick, and returned the third club, the contract would have been defeated. Or if, after winning this trick with the ace of clubs, he led a heart, the contract could be defeated. But again West made the mistake of returning a diamond, which South won with the king.

South now led the queen of spades and let it ride. When it held, a small spade was played and the jack finessed. The ace of spades then picked up West's king and now the six of clubs was an entry into dummy and the losing heart was discarded on the jack of clubs. In this manner the declarer made four odd.

Today's Contract Problem

South is playing the contract at four spades. South must lose two diamonds and a club. How can he prevent East from making a spade trick?

Solution in next issue. 4

MYSTERY MAN IN VIENNA PUTSCH

HUNT FOR "HERR KUNZE"

LEFT REBELS TO THEIR FATE

Vienna, Aug. 6.

Revelations concerning another mystery figure in the background of the attempted Nazi coup d'etat have been made following acceptance of the conclusion that he has made good his escape.

Ever since the raid on the Chancellery which led to the death of Dr. Dollfuss, the police have been assiduously seeking a man who went under the name of "Herr Kunze," who is believed to have been the master-mind behind the entire movement.

It is now alleged that the well-known Nazi lawyer, Dr. Waechter, who defended Rudolf Bertil, the man who attempted unsuccessfully to shoot Dr. Dollfuss last year is the man concealed by the name "Kunze."

'PHONE CALL.

It is stated that during the early stages of the putsch and while the rebels were still in occupation of the Chancellery, one of the leaders tried to telephone to "Herr Kunze" at a nearby cafe in order to consult him about the situation. "Kunze" had, however, already fled.

It is alleged that Dr. Waechter has disappeared from Austria and has reached Germany.—Reuter.

BATHER'S CAR RAIDED

CASTLE PEAK ROAD INCIDENT

Whilst Mr. Donald A. Corlett, assistant general manager of the States Steamship Co. in Hongkong, was bathing from the 14-mile beach on the Castle Peak Road yesterday afternoon, he was victimised by a thief who went to his motor-car, which was parked near by, and stole a wrist watch and $50 in money.

At about five o'clock, Mr. Paul Braga was passing the spot in his car, when, in response to a signal by Mr. Corlett, he stopped. Mr. Corlett informed him that he had come out to the beach with a lady friend who had with her some valuables, including rings, money, etc., as well as a passport and a steamer passage ticket. During their absence on the beach, Mr. Corlett stated, a thief evidently gained access to the car, having presumably secured possession of the key from Mr. Corlett's jacket pocket, stole various articles, and then locked the car again. It was at first feared that the whole of the lady's valuable had been stolen.

MAN ARRESTED.

Mr. Braga then motored to Tsun Wan Police Station, where he gave information of the theft, and later a European police officer and three Chinese detectives appeared on the scene.

As the result of police enquiries, a man was later arrested.

Seen this morning by a Telegraph representative, Mr. Corlett stated that the loss was not so heavy as was at first feared, being confined to a wrist watch and $50 in money.

WOUNDING RUMOUR

ALLEGED TROUBLE AT SHANHAIKWAN

BRITISH SOLDIER HIT BY BULLET?

Usually well-informed Chinese circles to-day repeat the allegation of a shooting incident during military manoeuvres near Shanhaikwan, insisting that a British soldier was wounded by a Japanese bullet.

The report says that the incident occurred during simultaneous Japanese and British manoeuvres and adds that it is now the subpect of diplomatic negotiations.

The British Legation at Peking is alleged to have received instructions from the British Foreign Office to see that the affair is not aggravated.

A whole series of rumours of untoward events—alleged to be an outcome of Japanese objections to the holding of manoeuvres in the Shanhaikwan area by British forces, although this has been a regular procedure,—have been published recently.

On Saturday, for instance, the British Legation denied that a clash between British and Japanese blue jackets had occurred at Chinwangtao.

C.E.R. HALTED BY BANDIT ATTACKS

HARBIN-SUIFENHO TRAFFIC SUSPENDED

Harbin, Aug. 7.

Considerable inconvenience has arisen from the complete suspension of traffic on the Chinese Eastern Railway from Harbin eastward, following a series of train wreckings and attacks by bandits, culminating in the overturning of a train on Saturday morning near Imienpo. How many persons were killed or wounded in the attack is still unknown.—Central News.
